CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. No amendment is pending, the Chair understands.

Mr. CARTER. The pending amendment, as I understand, is the amendment presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], proposing to strike out and insert as indicated in the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to make a request of the Senator in charge of the bill. There are parties on their way from California who are very deeply interested in the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, and also the amendment of the Senator from Montana, with regard to mining and the orders given by the Secretary of War. I myself think these matters had better be considered further, for fear of doing great injustice; and I ask that neither of these matters be acted upon to-day, so that we may have a little more time and so that the gentlemen I refer to can get here. They will be here to-morrow or the next day. It will take but a short time, because, I presume, when we understand it we will all arrive at an agreement without controversy. The other matters in the bill can be disposed of, and when the mining matter is called up we will have an understanding, probably, with regard to it.

Mr. CARTER. I have no disposition to debar anyone having an interest in the proposed legislation from the right of being heard. I do not know of any other amendment pending, save the one presented by the Senator from North Dakota, which is one of the amendments referred to by the Senator from Nevada. It is the desire of all Senators to promptly dispose of this bill. Its importance, independent of the subject-matter of the amendments referred to by the Senator from Nevada, warrants us in urging that the bill be passed at the earliest possible date. If other amendments are to be presented for consideration to-day I will have no objection to passing over until to-morrow the amendments referred to by the Senator from Nevada; and I therefore suggest that if other amendments are called for by the Chair they may be presented now.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer a modification of the amendment which I proposed to section 73. I propose to strike out the second word in the proposed amendment, the word "alien," and insert the following:

SEC. 73. That persons who are not citizens of the United States, or who prior to making location had not legally declared their intention to become such, shall not be permitted to locate, hold, or convey mining claims in said district of Alaska; nor shall any title to a mining claim acquired by location or purchase through any such person or persons be legal.

This is the modification I propose. I also propose to add a proviso at the end of the proposed amendment. I ask that the amendment may be read at the desk.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator from North Dakota propose to press the amendment now or have it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator from North Dakota simply desires to perfect the amendment offered by him; and to that there is no objection. It will not come to final disposition to-day.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be read, so that we can understand it.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 73, on page 469, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 73. That persons who are not citizens of the United States, or who prior to making location had not legally declared their intention to become such, shall not be permitted to locate, hold, or convey mining claims in said district of Alaska, nor shall any title to a mining claim acquired by location or purchase through any such person or persons be legal. In any civil action, suit, or proceeding to recover the possession of a mining claim, or for the appointment of a receiver, or for an injunction to restrain the working and operation of a mining claim, it shall be the duty of the court to inquire into and determine the question of the citizenship of the locator: Provided, That no location of a mining claim shall hereafter be made in the district of Alaska by any person or persons through an agent or attorney in fact, and all locations heretofore made by any person or persons through an agent or attorney in fact upon which $100 worth of labor or improvements had not been expended or made within ninety days first succeeding the date of such location are hereby declared to be null and void.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state, for the information of the Senate, that the proviso just read was suggested to me by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Not in that form. I suggested claims upon which a hundred dollars' worth of work shall not have been made for three months after the passage of this act, giving them an opportunity to do the work. That was my suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that it be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has already been ordered to be printed. It will lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before this subject passes from the consideration of the Senate, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota; and I premise that question by saying I suppose that some portion of the gold-bearing region of Alaska adjoins the gold-bearing region of British Columbia. I should like to inquire what regulations are made in British Columbia in relation to American miners who go there to take up claims?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have here a letter or a part of a letter which will explain and answer the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut, and with the indulgence of the Senate I will have it read at the desk, to show how American miners, when they get into foreign territory, are treated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is an extract from a letter which I received a few days ago from a gentleman who has had some experience in Canada in mining matters, and it covers the subject so thoroughly that I think it will completely answer the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Your amendment as a substitute for section 73 will be enthusiastically indorsed by every American miner, and by ninety-nine hundredths of all Americans throughout the West. On behalf of several thousand American miners I called the attention of Secretary Hay to the infamous retroactive alien law passed by the British Columbian parliament a year ago last January. Early in August, previous to the passage of this act, several thousand American miners went into a wild and unexplored region of British Columbia, discovering and locating a large number of placer mines on creeks, benches, and hills. We took out "free miners' licenses" for the term of one year, and paid many thousands of dollars into their public treasury.

Under one frivolous pretext and then another they postponed, delayed, and refused to record a large proportion of the claims that were staked, but the recorder assured the miners that their rights would be protected until the open season (the following June). But when we got back next spring, after traveling thousands of miles and spending a large amount of money, we found that we had no rights that these Canadians felt bound to respect. Although the miners' licenses, for which we paid $5, gave us the right to "prospect, locate and mine anywhere in the province of British Columbia for the term of one year," they repudiated their contracts, and flatly refused to allow us to "locate, buy, or hold through a British subject as trustee or agent." They obtained our money under false pretenses and they have got it yet. I told Secretary Hay in my letter that it was highway robbery pure and simple; that it was the most infamous outrage ever perpetrated by a civilized nation upon the citizens of a neighboring country. And had a like number of British subjects received the same treatment from any other nation, there would have been a prompt settlement or an immediate declaration of war.

The mining district to which I refer is now called the Atlin district, and it was for the express purpose of driving out the American from this district that the infamous retroactive law was passed; and with the aid of heavy taxation and annoying litigation they have in a great measure succeeded.

For forty years they have mined on American soil without let or hindrance, and now own many of the richest gold and silver mines in America, and this is the way that greedy nation of land pirates shows its gratitude for our kindness in allowing them to carry off hundreds of millions of gold and silver from our own soil.

Would to God that every Senator and Member of Congress could fully understand all the facts, and fully realize all the burdens the poor American miners have to bear under British rule.

I have spent several years in Alaska, British Columbia, Northwest Territory, and I assure you that the feeling amongst Americans is intensely bitter against the two Governments on account of the oppressive laws under which they have to live. The English nation has no sense of right. Fear is the only power that will govern them. We should strike back, and strike hard.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I hardly think the letter answers fully the inquiry which I made, and it seems to me that it is a very important matter which is touched upon in the proposed amendment. I know that it is not before the Senate, but, as I have understood, a great many American citizens have been digging gold on British soil for several years. I do not know to what difficulties they have been subjected, but in some way I think it is true that our citizens have been seeking gold on British soil and have been accumulating gold from British soil. Now, it becomes rather a delicate matter under those circumstances, as it seems to me, to prescribe that nobody but an American citizen shall be permitted to locate claims in Alaska. Of course if we do that, the British Government, in the way of retaliation, will say that no American citizen shall locate any claim upon British soil.

I have not investigated this matter at all, but I think we ought to be fully informed as to the action of the British or Canadian government when application is made by American citizens for the opportunity to mine gold on Canadian soil. I think we ought to be fully in possession of all the facts, and that was my only reason for asking the question at this time, that those who favor the amendment might, when it comes up for consideration, be able fully to inform the Senate on that subject.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it seems quite as well, in view of the presentation of the Senator's question, to make an explanation at this time on the subject-matter of his inquiry.

The Canadian government allows American citizens to take out what they call a miner's license, the full designation being a free miner's license. I do not know that there is any variation in the respective districts as to the amount to be paid for this license, nor is it material. The amount usually collected for the license is the sum of $5 per annum. This license permits the miner who holds it to explore, locate, and hold mining claims within the dominion of the Northwest Territory and British Columbia.

The laws of the United States have never permitted an alien to locate a mining claim upon the public domain. The laws of the United States which have been in force in Alaska for many years with reference to mining claims do not permit the location of a mining claim by an alien in the district of Alaska. Having regard, however, for the conditions which exist in Alaska, particularly upon the vague and indefinite boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska, Congress at its last session passed a section of a law which provided that the Secretary of the Interior should be and was authorized to extend to native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada equal rights and privileges with American citizens in the district of Alaska upon the same basis accorded to our citizens in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory. That authority is at present vested in the Secretary of the Interior. The purpose of that section of the law was to facilitate a reciprocal arrangement between miners passing back and forth over the ill-defined line of division between our own territory and the territory of British Columbia.

In addition to the amount of $5 per annum of an annual free miner's license tax, the parliament of British Columbia has likewise levied a 10 per cent royalty tax upon the gross output of all the mines held by our people in British Columbia. The Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me to finish the sentence I will yield. The Secretary of the Interior would therefore at the outset be required, in order to reach something of a reciprocal relationship between the people of the Dominion and the people of this country, to secure a repeal by British Columbia of their law requiring this 10 per cent royalty; likewise the levying of the miner's license tax. The Secretary might probably under his authority require the payment by resident citizens of Canada of the $5 license tax, but it would scarcely comport with our general policy to undertake the collection of the royalty they provide.

Since the passage of the law in the last Congress no effort has been made by the authorities of the Canadian government or of British Columbia to attempt to relieve conditions by relaxing rules or laws requiring the payment of the license tax or the royalty to which I have referred.

I will now yield with pleasure to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Montana if under the laws of the Dominion the American miner is treated differently from the Canadian miner. In other words, the American miner takes out a license to mine. Does not the Canadian do the same thing?

Mr. CARTER. I am not advised upon that point, nor am I prepared to state that the royalty is not required to be paid by the Canadian miner, just as the royalty is paid by the American miner.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the question I was about to put to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that in some portions of British America the miner takes out his license. I think, as to the provision for royalty, there was a special provision put upon the American miner by a special act. I do not think it was in force in that section of British Columbia where I have been a couple of times amongst the miners. I never heard of any royalty being paid there, but every American and every Canadian who mined had to take out a license paying, as the Senator states, $5.

I want to suggest to the Senator that, while we have had a law that excluded foreigners, it has always been construed in mining laws, so far as I know, that whenever a man had made his application for first papers he came within the rule and could take title; and the courts have held also, in one or two instances I know, that nobody could raise the question about a man's right to take a claim except the Government of the United States; and that if he took a claim and somebody disputed his right to do it, he would not have a standing in court to do that; so that foreigners have actually mined, to my personal knowledge, to a very large extent in this country, sometimes going to the trouble to have the title put in some other name, but sometimes not.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator from Montana if it is the understanding that these matters with regard to the mines shall lie over until to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. I have no desire, as I previously stated, to press the amendment for final disposition to-day.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest, then, that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota be printed, and that the matter with regard to mines shall lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been made some time ago. The bill is in the Senate as Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the amendment that was adopted upon his motion a few days ago in regard to Cape Nome mining. There was no provision made in regard to the 60-foot road that was reserved by act of Congress in 1898. I think that the road is right at high tide along the coast. Congress by an act reserved that for a roadway. I am informed that the Interior Department holds that, under that reservation, no mining can be permitted there while that reservation remains. It seems to me that that ought to be subject to the same regulation which is made in the Senator's amendment in regard to the land below high tide. I therefore would ask him to amend his amendment so as to include that, adding thereto "and the 60-foot reservation made by the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898," which will make that subject to exactly the same rules and regulations which are provided for the other.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the act of Congress referred to by the Senator from Arkansas provided for a reservation of 60 feet parallel with the shore line for a roadway through lands entered under that act. I do not think that by any reasonable construction that reservation can be supposed to extend to lands not entered under the particular act to which the 60-foot reservation refers. The Department of the Interior, however, is said to take a different view and to contend that the 60-foot strip reserved for road purposes in that act extends around the entire shore line of Alaska. If that construction is to be adhered to, I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that it would be far better to restrict the application of the 60-foot strip by providing that it should not apply to lands entered under the town-site law or to lands entered under the mining laws of the United States.

I have consulted with the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department with reference to this matter, and he intimated that the Department would hold that the 60-foot reservation referred to would extend around the entire coast. For the purpose of preventing that extension, which was manifestly not intended, he suggested that the better plan would be to specifically limit the roadway referred to to the lands entered under the act of Congress in which this reservation is embodied.

There was a special reason for this reservation of a roadway in the act we then had under consideration. That act related to the entry of lands under the homestead law, and likewise for trade and commerce. We provided in the act that all lands entered along navigable streams or along the seashore should be confined to 80 rods in length along the line of the navigable water or seashore and that a space 80 rods in length should be reserved by the United States from sale for the use of the public.

Further still, it was provided that through these tracts of land entered for purposes of trade and commerce a 60-foot roadway should be reserved, the purpose of that reservation being to prevent the large canning and other establishments that were contemplating the entry of land under the act from constructing fences, buildings, or other obstructions from the shore of the sea to the cliff near by, and thus preventing passage from one point to another up and down the coast.

This reservation would not have been necessary had there existed in Alaska any legislative authority whereby roadways might be condemned or provided for. It was inserted as a precautionary measure to prevent persons with single holdings from obstructing travel along the coast. In a mining region where inclosures and structures form no part, or a very trifling part, of improvement incident to the development of the country, the reason for the reservation ceases to exist.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. LODGE. I move to take up Senate bill 2355.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside, so that the consideration of the Alaska bill may be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Alaska bill be permitted to occupy the time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the reason for the form of amendment suggested by the Assistant Attorney-General is further borne out by reference to the inconvenience and difficulty incident to the enforcement of this particular reservation in the case of town sites. It seems that a case is now pending before the Department wherein it is contended that owing to this reservation of a 60-foot strip of land parallel with the coast the town site can not be extended down to mean high-tide line; that this 60 feet of reserved land must intervene between mean high-tide line and the line of the town site.

The obvious disadvantage in such a reservation must appear to all. It would be quite impossible for persons desiring to extend the sewerage system of the town or city down to the sea to do so without coming to Congress for special permission to cross the 60 feet of reserved land intended for a roadway.

I think, in view of the suggestions made, that the amendment of the Senator may for the time being be passed over, to the end that he may examine the amendment presented by the Assistant Attorney-General.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the House of Representatives passed a bill providing for the opening of this roadway for mining purposes the same, or practically the same, as the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana the other day, which was agreed to.

I have had a conference with the chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, Mr. LACEY, and we think that it is especially important that that 60 feet reserved for a roadway should be opened up to the miners the same as the other gold-bearing lands in the amendment that has already been agreed to. I have been informed that certain parties who had adjoining land claimed that they were entitled to whatever gold might be found within this 60-foot roadway which had been reserved, but the Interior Department hold that this reservation takes it out from under the mineral laws, and that no one under the present reservation can get any right or engage in mining on that particular point.

I am also informed that probably it is the most valuable part of the whole land there for mining purposes. It seems to me that that ought to be opened up for purposes of mining, subject to the same rules, to be made by the miners, not inconsistent with the general laws of the United States. I can see no reason why these miners should be debarred from working that 60 feet for the purpose of obtaining gold that would not apply to the remainder of the gold-bearing lands there upon the seashore.

Now, as to what particular wording will do that, we had agreed on an amendment which simply inserted in the amendment heretofore agreed to by the Senate, after the word "United States," in line 3, "and the 60-foot reservation made in the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898," so that would put it precisely in the same situation as the other and the miners would have the same opportunity there. I think that is just.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], as I understand him, says that this roadway extends along the whole coast; but I think if the amendment was inserted where the Senator states it would only apply, as his amendment applied, to that part of it as described along the Bering Sea. I can see no objection to it. I can see no reason why they should not be permitted to work that roadway for mining, subject to the same rules as in the other case. That is all I have to say. I am willing that it shall be passed over.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the amendment be printed and lie on the table with other amendments until we shall reach that section for final disposition.

Mr. BERRY. Then I will ask the Secretary to insert after the words "United States," in the third line of the amendment which was agreed to by the Senate—to insert that which is written in red ink on the print which I send him, and that it be printed.

Mr. CARTER. As no other amendment seems to be pressed at this time——

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask a question relating to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator if it is true that at the time the Laplander claims, as they are known, were located in Alaska an alien could not under the law there in force locate a mining claim in Alaska?

Mr. CARTER. The mining law of the United States, under which all locations are made, and no other law exists, provides that the public domain of the United States shall be open to exploration and location under the mining laws by citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I know that.

Mr. CARTER. Under that section of the law it is inconceivable that an alien can make a valid location. It has been held, however, I will state to the Senator, that the question of the right of the alien, or the question of his citizenship, can only be raised by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. That is in the case in 152 United States Reports?

Mr. CARTER. In 152 United States, the case of Manuel against Wulff. In that case it was held, admitting that the locator was an alien at the time the location was made, that he having, during the progress of the trial, offered to declare his intention and, the offer being accommodated by the court, did declare his intention, thereby relieved himself from the embarrassment of the alienage and validated the claim.

Mr. TELLER. To what case does the Senator refer?

Mr. CARTER. The case of Manuel against Wulff.

Mr. SPOONER. Manuel against Wulff, in 152 United States. I shall not probably be able to be here to-morrow, but I want to bring to the attention of the Senator this phase of the amendment for a moment. Of course the general policy which shall be adopted, or ought to be adopted, as to permitting aliens to locate mining claims in our domain is one thing, and that depends upon considerations apart from the matter to which I desire for a moment to speak. I have always supposed that as an imaginary line divides our domain from Canada we should permit the subjects of Great Britain in Canada or the Canadians to exercise as to the acquisition of mining rights at least the same privileges and rights which over the line our citizens were permitted to acquire and exercise in the Dominion of Canada.

There is some dispute here as to the facts. I am informed by a very accurate and able lawyer, in whom I have the profoundest confidence, and who I know well, Judge Burke, of Seattle, to whom I put the question in the interest of some constituents of mine, that in the district of Yukon "free miner," it is regarded by law, shall mean a male or female over 18; that there is no limitation whatever as to citizenship, and that the royalty of 10 per cent levied on all miners applies to the Canadian who has obtained a mining license just as it applies to the American who has obtained a mining license.

But I do not care to discuss that point. This is the phase of this matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate and of the Senator for a moment. The amendment provides:

That aliens shall not be permitted to locate, hold, or convey mining claims in said district of Alaska—

That is a matter of general policy—

nor shall any title to a mining claim acquired by location or purchase through an alien be legal.

I have constituents who in perfect good faith purchased for valuable consideration claims located by what are called the Laplanders, not many perhaps, but who have expended money in the improvement of the mines, and I do not see any reason why Congress should pass a law destroying those conveyances. I believe it can be demonstrated that the Laplanders were entitled under the laws that then existed to make the location. At any rate, they were entitled, it has been decided by the Supreme Court, if at the time they made the location they were disqualified by alienage, to remove it by declaring before the final adjudication of the claim their intention to become citizens of the United States.

I hardly think that it would be deemed a fair proposition to put into the statute a provision that claims acquired in perfect good faith by American citizens through conveyance from the Laplanders should be by act of Congress invalidated. I want to be heard on this proposition. Is it to come up to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. It is coming up to-morrow, I understand.

Mr. SPOONER. Do you expect to get through with this bill to-morrow?

Mr. CARTER. It is hoped that we can finish it to-morrow. There are only two amendments likely to involve any discussion.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I shall have to be here to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I was about to state, at the time the Senator from Wisconsin took the floor, that certain Senators desire to present amendments, but are not now prepared to do so. The pending amendment Senators desire shall go over until to-morrow; and in view of this state of facts, I suggest that the bill be laid aside. I yield to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WARREN. I rose to offer an amendment to the bill which I have been waiting patiently for some days to offer. Of course I do not mean to obstruct business, but I have amendments which have been printed, and have been pending before the body for some days, which I should like action upon at some time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. In view of the wishes of the Senator, which I was not aware of before, I will withdraw the motion so that he may submit his amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I will permit the matter to go over until to-morrow morning and will not press it further, if the Senator in charge of the bill thinks we shall have an opportunity to consider the bill to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. That is the understanding.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BLAND.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that on next Tuesday memorial addresses will be delivered on the late Representative BLAND, of Missouri.

NOTICE OF EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to announce that to-morrow, at the earliest time practicable, I shall move an executive session for the purpose of considering treaties.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. THURSTON. I desire to announce that, on account of the absence of some Senators who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill has been somewhat delayed; but I shall ask to-morrow at the first opportunity to proceed with its consideration.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] informs me that he does not care to continue the consideration of the Alaska bill this afternoon, and so I ask unanimous consent that for three-quarters of an hour unobjected pension cases on the Calendar may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that three-quarters of an hour may be devoted to the consideration of unobjected pension cases on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the first pension case on the Calendar will be stated.

MARY A. COLHOUN.

The bill (S. 3619) granting a pension to Mary A. Colhoun was announced as first in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, after the word "Navy," to insert "and pay her a pension;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "month," to insert "in lieu of that she is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Colhoun, widow of Edmund R. Colhoun, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Colhoun."

JAMES S. JORDAN.

The bill (H. R. 4047) granting an increase of pension to James S. Jordan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James S. Jordan, late of Company I, Ninetieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LANDEGAN.

The bill (H. R. 6161) granting an increase of pension to John Landegan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John Landegan, late of Company D, First Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Second New York Volunteer Cavalry, and also chief of scouts for Third Cavalry Division and for the Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH C. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 7264) granting a pension to Hannah C. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Hannah C. Smith, stepmother of Edward C. Smith, late of Company G, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend, in line 6, before the word "stepmother," by inserting "dependent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL HANSON.

The bill (H. R. 5503) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Hanson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel Hanson, late sergeant-major Twenty-ninth Maine Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALISTA F. HALL.

The bill (H. R. 2681) granting an increase of pension to Calista F. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Calista F. LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, for five days, on account of sickness in family.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and resumed consideration of the bill (S. 222) to provide a government in the Territory of Hawaii, with Mr. MOODY in the chair.

Mr. MCALEER. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCDOWELL].

Mr. MCDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, two years ago, when the proposition of annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States was before Congress, I was opposed to annexation for what, in my judgment, seemed very good reasons.

First, annexation was desired by a very small proportion of the inhabitants of these islands, and these few desired it for selfish and mercenary purposes. It was the "Dole oligarchy" or "family compact" that had usurped all power to itself and now desired to be perpetuated in power under the protection of the United States.

Second. I believed, as I now believe, that by making these islands a part of the United States we bring the cheap Asiatic laborer into direct competition with the American laborer. To bring under our own flag 40,000 Japanese contract laborers and 25,000 Chinese contract laborers means to limit to a considerable extent the opportunities of our own American laborers.

Later developments and conditions confirm very strongly my first views on this subject.

But annexation is an accomplished fact, and we are now confronted with the problem to provide a good Territorial form of government for the islands. I am gratified to say that it seemed to be the unanimous idea of the Committee on Territories, of which committee I have the honor to be a member, to give the Hawaiian Islands a government similar to that given to other acquired Territories of the United States. To my knowledge no member of the committee even suggested any discrimination in the commercial intercourse between the United States and the islands, or "taxation without representation." However, it has been intimated that some imperialistic amendments may be proposed to the bill while it is under consideration in the House.

BAD FEATURES OF THE BILL REPORTED BY THE COMMISSION.

The annexation resolution was approved July 7, 1898. As provided by the joint resolution annexing the islands, the President appointed five commissioners to recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands as they might deem necessary and proper. The Hawaiian commission consisted of Senators JOHN T. MORGAN and SHELBY M. CULLOM and Representative ROBERT R. HITT, of the United States, and Sanford B. Dole and W. F. Frear, the two latter being residents of the Hawaiian Islands. The commissioners met at Honolulu August 18, 1898, and at the beginning of the last session of the Fifty-fifth Congress the President of the United States transmitted their report to Congress.

Among things recommended in this report was "a bill to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii." A reading of the bill recommended by the commission would lead any patriotic American to declare that it was not the product of the brain of any American statesman or legislator. My first impression was that the Hawaiian members of the commission had hypnotized our own distinguished members of the commission. The more I studied the bill the more confirmed was my conclusion in the matter. I had heard that the members of the "Dole family compact" were skilled in the arts of diplomacy and strategy; that they easily controlled, for their own selfish purposes, the kindly, friendly, liberal, affectionate, and confiding native Hawaiians. Yet I had confidence that our own able members of the Hawaiian commission would be able to withstand their wiles and cunning.

I do not believe that there was ever a bill to provide a government for a Territory presented to the American Congress more un-Democratic, un-American, and unprecedented than House bill 2972 in its original form. I doubt if the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, without a very painful (Payne-full) effort, could produce a bill more "un-Republican, un-American, unwarranted, unprecedented, and unconstitutional" than this bill. [Applause.]

I invite your attention to a few of its most pernicious provisions:

The governor and the secretary of the Territory were to be appointed by the President. The governor should appoint the judges of the supreme court, judges of the circuit courts, and all other officers of the Territory except the members of the legislature. The supreme judges were to be appointed for life, or during good behavior.

The supreme court was to be the judge of the qualifications and elections of the members of the legislature. No one was to be eligible to election as a senator, nor could anyone vote for a senator, who did not have property to the value of $2,000, or an income of not less than $1,000. This meant the continuance of an oligarchical form of government in the Hawaiian Islands. The governor could make and control the courts. The supreme court could make and control the legislature. The governor and his favorites would have a corner on the public offices. The commission framed a bill under which it might not have been possible for anyone outside of the "Dole family compact" to hold a public office in the Territory. It is reported that every officer under the Dole régime is grandfather, or father, or father-in-law, or uncle, or brother, or brother-in-law, or son, or son-in-law, or nephew, or cousin, of some other public officer. The persons who have been in control of affairs in the Hawaiian Islands of late years are called "missionaries"—improperly so. There is evident need of the instrumentality of the genuine missionaries to remove the selfishness from the hearts of these people and make them more Christian-like. [Applause.]

Who ever heard of the judges of any Territory of the United States being appointed for life? The bill framed by the commission provided that the present incumbents of the supreme court should continue in office until their respective offices became vacant, which would be by death or impeachment, and then their successors should be appointed for life or during good behavior. It may be proper to remark that one of the supreme court justices was a member of the Hawaiian commission and a member of the committee to consider and report on the judiciary. He evidently believes that "self-preservation is the first law of life."

The Committee on Territories has amended the bill, with the view of eliminating the objectionable features already pointed out. The chief justice and the associate justices of the supreme court are to be appointed by the President, and for a term of six years, instead of for life or during good behavior. The judges are not to have jurisdiction over elections and qualifications of members of the legislature. The property qualification provision has been stricken out. We believe that all these changes are in the interests of a good government and a popular government in the Territory of Hawaii.

The commission's bill provides that the public lands of Hawaii shall be under the control of a land commissioner appointed by the governor. This might afford an opportunity for land grabbing and favoritism in the sales, grants, and leases of lands. After the annexation, the Dole administration proceeded to dispose of large tracts of the public lands, and it became necessary for the President to put a check to this wrongful procedure by an Executive order. An amendment to the bill very properly refers the administration of the sales, grants, and leases of the public lands of Hawaii to the Commissioner of Public Lands here in Washington.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN HAWAII.

The labor conditions in Hawaii are disastrous to the best interests of the American laborer. The sugar planters, the rice growers, the mill owners, and others have been for years importing the cheap oriental labor. The contract-labor system is in vogue. Since the date of annexation it is estimated that the wealthy syndicates have brought to the islands from 25,000 to 30,000 Japanese contract laborers, under contracts of three to five years. More than one-half of the population of the islands is made up of Chinese and Japanese. There is no opportunity for the American laborer in the Territory of Hawaii. He would be brought to starvation in competition with the cheap Asiatic laborer. The American laborer at home must also feel the harmful effect of the competition of this oriental labor. The acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands has not enlarged the opportunities of the American laborers, but it will make it harder for many of them to gain a livelihood.

Asiatic laborers are paid $15 per month and European laborers $18 per month. What will the American laborer, brought into competition with this cheap labor from the East, say of the party responsible for this condition of things?

The commissioners in their report to the President, on page 139, say:

> That as a commercial or business proposition the matter of the employment of cheap labor, imported from various islands and countries, became the important subject of Hawaiian consideration. The large profits resulting from the cultivation and manufacture of sugar where inexpensive Asiatic labor was to be obtained produced the legitimate result of aggregating capital in large amounts for the purchase or leasing of sugar lands, where this class of labor could be employed most profitably.
> The facilities which existed under the Hawaiian monarchy for obtaining grants, concessions, and leases of government lands were availed of by speculative favorites and others, and large plantations by wealthy planters instead of small holdings by industrious heads of families became the rule upon the islands.

Notwithstanding the fact that the President and Congress were apprised of the contract-labor system in the islands and the system of farming by corporations, for almost two years the Hawaiian Islands have been under the American flag and not a thing has been done to check the progress of these un-American systems. The number of contract laborers has been greatly augmented. During the last year more than 25,000 Japanese contract laborers have been imported into the island. Several hundred acres of land have been leased to the sugar syndicates.

Will some one of our Republican friends explain why these things have been permitted to be done? Why this delay in legislating for the Territory of Hawaii? We had the report of the Hawaiian commission sixteen months ago. If it was ever of any value as an index as to what should be done it was as useful in the last session of Congress as in this. It certainly has not improved with age.

Perhaps there was method in this long delay. Up to the outbreak of the war with Spain the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands was considered hopeless. It had failed to be done by treaty ratification in the Senate. The Speaker of the House, and certainly a majority of the members, were strongly opposed to the proposition of annexation. But the leaders of the Administration took advantage of the situation in war times, when enthusiasm and not judgment controlled the action of many, and urged the annexation of the islands as a war measure. A majority of the members yielded to the deception. Now, annexation came rather unexpectedly. The large corporations of the islands were taken by surprise, notwithstanding they desired annexation. They needed time to import many thousands of contract laborers before Congress would legislate for the islands. It would seem that the former Republican Congress and this Republican Congress have been very considerate of the interests of the sugar syndicates of the islands.

What have we secured by this acquisition of territory? Let me enumerate some of the most tangible things: Forty-five thousand Japanese contract laborers; 25,000 Chinese; 15,000 Portuguese; 1,000 South Sea Islanders; 1,200 lepers; the bubonic plague; a class of political speculators who were planning to have an oligarchy under the protection of Uncle Sam.

Your committee has endeavored, so far as possible, to frame a bill that would rectify many evils existing in these islands. But there are very many bad conditions which can not be changed by legislation. Only time itself will make many desired changes possible. It will be a long time before the conditions of the islands will afford any remunerative employment to any considerable number of American laborers.

I can not support this bill unless it is further amended relative to the labor system and the land system. We should legislate now to prevent the enforcement of contracts under the contract-labor system, no matter whether the contracts were made heretofore or shall be made hereafter. We want no semislavery or serfdom anywhere under the American flag. Give the sugar planters, rice growers, and mill owners of Hawaii to understand that they are under the Constitution of the United States and that they must respect our laws. I shall favor the following amendment to section 10:

Provided, That no suit or proceedings shall be maintained for the specific performance of any contract heretofore or hereafter entered into for personal labor or service, nor shall any remedy exist or be enforced for breach of any such contract, except a civil suit or proceedings instituted solely to recover damages for such breach.

There should also be specific legislation to put in force the laws of the United States prohibiting the creation or continuance of long leases of valuable lands and directing the survey and subdivision of all the public lands as a part of the heritage of the people. The commissioners in their report, in speaking of this subject, say:

The large holdings [of land] have become larger, and the small ones have been driven out or absorbed. Thus the prime object of American citizenship, the making of homes and the complete development of the family as the unit of our social system, seems in a degree to have been lost sight of in the Hawaiian Islands.

HAWAII AND PUERTO RICO.

It seems that Hawaii is to fare far better at the hands of the American Congress than poor, starving Puerto Rico. It would perhaps take a ponderous statesman from New York, or a profound expounder of the Constitution from Pennsylvania, or an Athenian lawyer from Ohio to tell why this should be. The Committee on Territories has tried to do its "plain duty" in this matter, guided by the injunctions of the Constitution and the promptings of the sense of justice, honor, and right. No tariff customs are to be imposed on products coming from Hawaii into this country or on products going from this country into Hawaii. There will be free trade. It is unfortunate for the Puerto Ricans that the matter of legislating for them was not referred to the Committee on Territories. It is personally gratifying to me to say to the members of this House that I can safely count a majority of our committee in favor of free trade with Puerto Rico, and the others, I believe, are open to conviction without any sugar-coated, tobacco-steeped, or rum-soaked influence. [Applause.]

Had the legislation for Puerto Rico been intrusted to the Committee on Territories, no doubt the Republican party would have been saved from the sorry predicament that it is now in. The President's recommendations as to "our plain duty" would have been carried out. He would have been saved from the humiliating position in which he is now placed. How distressing it must be to him to be misrepresented by his friends! How harassing it must be to him to note the contradictions of those who profess to speak for him!

The Washington Star of March 27, a consistent and ardent Administration paper, speaks thus editorially:

The President has, in his annual message, made recommendation to Congress, and that calls for legislation. The people expect and demand legislation. If, therefore, Congress shows itself incapable of action, what is more likely, what would be more justified in the circumstances, than the election of a House next fall instructed to do what the country manifestly wants done about this business? If a Republican House disappoints the people and embarrasses the situation in the Senate, the alternative naturally is a Democratic House. Are the Republicans maneuvering to lose the next House?

Suppose the question, by the cowardice of Congress, is left to the President. The President is committed to free trade with Puerto Rico. His message to Congress on the subject is so far his only quotable deliverance. This man and that, after a visit to the White House, has said this thing and that, going to show that the President has changed his mind, but the message is official and still stands. The President will be his party's standard bearer in the campaign. He will want to succeed himself in the White House. The people will be demanding free trade with Puerto Rico. If he is left with a free hand, will he not act in conformity with his views and his own and his party's interests?

But while that might save him, it would not be likely to save the next House. Let the free traders stand to their guns; and let the tariff men take notice. The storm is not going to blow over. The man who imagines that imagines a vain thing. If a tariff bill is passed, every line written against it in the Republican press will be so much ammunition for the Democrats when the national campaign begins.

But the distinguished Speaker of this House, who assisted to bring Republican members into line for tariff on Puerto Rican products, in a letter recently given to the public press, has this to say:

What the Senate is going to do is problematical. It has its share of cowards. The Senate is always the body upon which the great interests concentrate their efforts to defeat proper legislation. But this fact remains, that I have the knowledge that I have done my simple duty, and have done it in consultation and in cooperation with the President of the United States, whose heart is quick to feel the afflictions of this little island; I have done it in conference with such men as ALLISON, FORAKER, and the earnest patriots of the Senate.

Now, who is the real mouthpiece of the President? It is "confusion confounded" to have such state of affairs existing. Has the President changed his mind?

Did not members on this floor say that they had changed their minds because the President had changed his mind? Had they all been to see "Dr. HANNA," the wonderful mind changer?

Hawaii is to have free trade with this country; representation in Congress; all the privileges and rights that any other of our organized Territories enjoys. Yet, her population is the most heterogeneous mass of humanity to be found on any equal area on the globe. More than half of the inhabitants are Asiatics. They are not citizens, and they do not intend to become citizens. Only about a third of the people will be given the right of franchise.

No one will deny that the inhabitants of Puerto Rico, in the aggregate, are superior to those of Hawaii. They are better material out of which to make a good American Territory. The population is more homogeneous than that of Hawaii.

The Puerto Rican labor system is not cursed by any species of slavery or serfdom. The land is quite generally in small tracts.

The following pertinent editorial on this subject appeared in the Philadelphia North American (Republican) March 9:

THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Whatever may happen to Puerto Rico, Hawaii, at least, is fairly on the way to American government. The Senate has passed the bill creating it a Territory, with a governor, legislature, courts, and a full outfit of civil officials. The internal revenue, customs, and navigation laws of the United States are extended to the islands, and the new Territory is to be represented by a Delegate in Congress.

Every argument in favor of extending these favors to Hawaii applies with double force to Puerto Rico. Hawaii is over 2,000 miles from our western coast. Puerto Rico is within half that distance of the shore line of our original thirteen States. Hawaii has a little over a hundred thousand people, of whom the great majority are Kanakas, Japanese, and Chinese. Puerto Rico has nearly a million people, among whom those of European race predominate. In Hawaii any government that takes account of fitness as we understand it must necessarily be a pure oligarchy. In Puerto Rico the materials of democracy are present; all that is necessary are schooling and experience.

The Puerto Ricans are the same sort of people that have been governing themselves for over half a century under our flag in Arizona, New Mexico, and parts of Colorado and California, except that they are of purer white stock. Of the same race in the United States we have made governors, Congressmen, and ministers to foreign capitals. If we establish public schools in which every Puerto Rican child can gain an education, there is no reason why a home-rule government may not be maintained there with credit both to us and to the islanders.

But Hawaii makes a good beginning. The extension of the American system to that group assures us that expansion is not to be entirely divorced from republicanism. The American who reclines under the flag at Honolulu may feel that he is truly at home.

In honor, in justice, and in right we are bound to treat Puerto Rico as favorably as we do Hawaii. I congratulate Hawaii that she has fallen into the hands of friends. I pity Puerto Rico that she has seemingly fallen into the clutches of despoilers. [Applause.]

Mr. MCALEER. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, there are a few features of this bill to which I desire to call the attention of the House. One is the concluding section with relation to the Chinese now in Hawaii. It provides:

That Chinese in the Hawaiian Islands when this act takes effect may within one year thereafter obtain certificates of residence as required by "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States,' approved May 5, 1892," and until the expiration of said year shall not be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States if found therein without such certificates.

Everyone is aware, I suppose, that the Hawaiian Islands are filled with Chinese; that a large number of people of that race were there when those islands came under the dominion of the United States, and that great hordes of Asiatics have been imported since.

All here are also aware, I suppose, that but a few short years since a tremendous agitation shook this country, and especially the Pacific slope, over the menace of Chinese cheap labor, and that it was thought necessary that legislation, extremely drastic and denounced by some as uncivilized and cruel, should be resorted to in order to deal with the Chinese problem and exclude the competition that threatened our white domestic labor.

Now, according to this bill, as I understand it, we are providing that great numbers of Chinese, resident in the Hawaiian Islands, not only those who were there when we acquired those islands, but the many thousands brought there under contract since, shall obtain certificates and possess the right to go anywhere in the United States and, in any line of business which they may see proper to enter upon, to compete with our own laborers. This is one of the fruits of reaching out and gathering in islands here and there, without reference to what the islands are, without reference to the people who inhabit them, and without proper care to prevent those islands from being overrun, while under our own control, with the most undesirable class of Asiatics.

We have in the Hawaiian Islands not only many who are entirely undesirable, but many others who are a serious menace to our own institutions, and provision is here made for domesticating them.

I find in this bill another provision not novel, but worthy, I think, of a word of comment. That is section 5, which provides—

That except as herein otherwise provided, the Constitution and all the laws of the United States locally applicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States.

In this is not only a formal enactment but a philosophy comparatively new in the United States and, I suppose, tolerably new to philosophers in general. This section is to be made an exemplification of the doctrine that the Congress of the United States possesses power to extend the Constitution, to limit the force and scope of the Constitution, to determine when and where the Constitution shall have effect and when and where it shall have none. Now, the old doctrine was, and the correct doctrine to-day, I think, is, that Congress is absolutely without any power to float the Constitution anywhere, to anchor it at any place, or to deprive any inch of the territory of the United States legislated for as a continuing possession or any of its inhabitants from coming and being under the influence and effect and domination of the Constitution.

I do not know exactly what the draftsman of this bill meant; whether he meant to extend the laws so far as locally applicable or whether he meant also to extend the Constitution so far as locally applicable. The phraseology would bear either construction.

The Constitution as extended "shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States!"

That is, perhaps, the Constitution, wheresoever locally applicable, shall have the same force and effect within the Territory of Hawaii as elsewhere in the United States!

Now, to me it is a strange thought, although it is a very popular one, I admit, with a certain element (and in that sense it has lost its strangeness), that the Constitution, the supreme law of the land—that by which the Congress itself is created; that which is made to govern everything that belongs to the American Republic and to control every agency under the Republic—is itself so trivial and insignificant a thing that the Congress can extend it to any Territory or any part of any Territory where "locally applicable," or restrain its operations and prevent its having effect in any Territory or in any part of any Territory.

It may seem singular that this new doctrine should have been evolved as it has been in the last year or two. The exigencies which called it forth certainly must be extraordinary. It is not a natural deduction; it is not a natural development. I submit that it is not a natural inspiration. There must be particular occasion for it; there must be particular use for it. There must be necessity for the existence and the application of such a doctrine, or certainly it would not have been invented, and certainly so many would not be repeating and preaching it. What has called forth this doctrine? What has suggested its promulgation? What has caused so many gentlemen to insist upon it, so often and so loudly, and, apparently, with so much sincerity? I say apparently because I wish to cast no reflection upon the sincerity of anyone, and yet to me it is strange how a man who permits himself to think upon the subject can, in sincerity, believe in the soundness of the doctrine.

Of course we have not far to go and not much investigation to make to determine why this doctrine has been promulgated or why some men cling to it with such desperate energy. If the Constitution takes care of itself, if the Constitution is the one masterful law in this country, superior to all other laws, the supreme law by which all other laws are tested, then what may be done in any particular quarter, at any particular time, by any particular agency, must be determined by the Constitution itself. And in ascertaining what the Constitution means and what it is, after studying its own words and recurring to the history of the convention which framed it, and the concurrent facts surrounding it, appeal and reference must be made to the expositions of it by the Supreme Court of the United States. And neither in that great instrument itself nor in anything connected with the history of its formation, neither in the declarations of those who framed it nor in the decisions of the Supreme Court, can be found any foundation or pretext for this new and strange doctrine, which makes the Constitution subject to the whim, wish, or will of Congress or any incident or accident of Congressional legislation.

Ought not our friends who invoke this doctrine to pause before they push it as far as it seems now their determination that it shall go? Ought they not to realize that it is far better to be upon sound constitutional ground, and to do the things which they desire to do only so far as the Constitution will permit, and to stop the doing of them at the point where their action would become unconstitutional? Would not that be far safer and better than to proceed as they have begun, to continue in the way they are going? If the Constitution can be annulled by Congress, what is the Constitution worth? Who can draw the line, who can mark the point, to which Congressional interference with the Constitution, or Congressional annulment of the Constitution, may go, and the point or the line beyond which Congress can not annul, limit, check, or interfere with that instrument, regarded by many as sacred, and by many more as the supreme law of the land, the test for all other laws?

Gentlemen would say that only with respect to the territory of the United States has Congress this ample power. That as to the States, of course the Congress can not dispense with the Constitution or interfere with it, can not carry it to a State and can not withhold it from a State; but as to the Territories of the United States, there Congress is supreme, and there the Constitution has no place unless Congress shall see fit to give it place.

How does it happen, or how can it happen, that Congress is supreme in the Territories, independent of the Constitution? What is the foundation for that contention? What is the support for it, if it has any?

If one holds to that doctrine, he must maintain either that the Constitution gives this power to Congress, this ample and supreme power of legislation over the Territories and their inhabitants, or that from some other source, independent of the Constitution, Congress has acquired it. Does the Constitution give it to Congress? If the Constitution gives the power to Congress, whatever it is, then the Constitution goes to the Territory and is in the Territory and over the Territory, and Congress legislates under the Constitution, exercising the powers given by the Constitution. If the Constitution conveys to Congress ample and unrestrained power of legislation in the Territories, then how can you dispense with the Constitution when Congress would exercise that power?

Why talk about there being no Constitution in or over the Territory unless Congress carries it there, if by virtue of the Constitution itself and by exercise of the power given by the Constitution Congress legislates for the Territory and the people who dwell in it?

Now, if it be true that the power to legislate respecting the Territories is derived from the Constitution, then the Constitution must determine the power. Then every time the power is exercised—whenever the question of exercising it arises—the Constitution must be appealed to, and the decision of the Constitution must be final and conclusive.

Some gentlemen deal with this Congressional power to legislate with strange inconsistency. At one time, in one breath, they say that the Constitution does not extend to a Territory except by Congressional action, by Congressional extension, and quote from the Constitution a clause from which they deduce the power to legislate free from constitutional restraint. They find in the Constitution a clause giving Congress power to deal with the Territories, and at the same time find that the Constitution has nothing to do with the Territories, but that the Congress has complete control not only over them but also over the Constitution itself beyond the State lines. And this is the paragraph of the Constitution which not only makes the Congress omnipotent, but which at the same time makes the Constitution itself impotent indeed—provided always, however, that the new school of philosophers are not in error:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Some insist that the power of Congress is absolute, not only over the Territories but over the Constitution also, outside the States, because the Constitution confers such unlimited power in and by the paragraph just quoted; that absolute power is absolutely granted by the Constitution over the Constitution.

I deny that in creating Congress through and under and by the Constitution, the Constitution in any particular was made subordinate to Congress. The Constitution did not perish in the throes of maternity in giving birth to Congress.

Moreover, this paragraph refers to the territory belonging to the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and there is no convincing reason for believing that the framers of the Constitution had any other territory in mind.

This Congressional power, however great, however far it may extend, however many things it may reach, however extraordinary it may be, must be a ceded power, and therefore not superior to the higher power which grants it. Is there any trouble with that proposition? What gentleman dare assert that the warrant for Congressional action is found in the Constitution and yet deny, when the extent of the Congressional power is questioned, when the question is as to what Congress can do and what Congress can not do with a Territory, that the Constitution itself must be appealed to for answer?

When a dispute arises as to whether Congress has or has not any particular power, or extent of power, logically, naturally, constitutionally, the controversy must be settled by appealing to the Constitution, by getting the correct decision from the words of the Constitution, or, if necessary, from the proceedings of those who founded it, by the aid of the light of concurrent history, or from the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States interpreting the Constitution. The Constitution is the fountain head, the Congress one of the streams flowing from it. Can the stream rise higher than its source? Hardly, I think, even under the pressure of "expansion." I care not to dwell longer upon that proposition. I know how easily one may be wrong while most confident that he is right; and although I am confident of the correctness of my proposition, I may be entirely in error; but I would be very much obliged to any gentleman on the other side if he would be kind enough to show me wherein I err, if that be error.

If you quote the Constitution for the power, you are bound by the Constitution; your power must be derived from it. Whether you have it or have it not in any particular instance must be determined by the Constitution and the exposition of the Constitution by the only authority appointed by itself to give us an exposition of it, the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, if that be not true, tell me wherein lies the fallacy. If it be true, tell me what goes with your doctrine that the Constitution must be extended to a Territory; "that the Constitution, so far as locally applicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory (or any Territory) as elsewhere in the United States" only when Congress is pleased to say so. How can Congress determine what the power and the effect of the Constitution is or shall be? How can Congress determine that the Constitution shall have a certain effect in one place and a different effect in another place? How is that possible, as a matter of law or as a matter of reason? Can a director of a corporation cast aside the charter which created the corporation which made him?

But perhaps the Congressional power is derived from some other source than the Constitution. The difficulties are no less great in the way of the man or party who would maintain that doctrine. Do you choose to take the position that the Constitution does not give to Congress the unrestrained power to legislate for the Territories, but that Congress has it independent of the Constitution? Who takes that position? Who is here to maintain that doctrine? I will be under great obligations to the proponent of that doctrine if he will explain it and give us the philosophy upon which it rests. Then we would have the Constitution, not the supreme law of the land; then we would have the Constitution, made to govern the affairs of the American people, not governing in all particulars; then we would have Congress, which can not exist independent of the Constitution, to which it is subject with everything it does and can do, completely independent of the Constitution, by reason of some power derived elsewhere. Now, who dares to state that proposition and endeavor to maintain it?

Upon what ground other than one of these two can the contention be made that the Constitution has to be carried by an act of Congress to a Territory to get there at all; that the Constitution for its vitality anywhere, respecting any subject, depends upon Congressional legislation? Where can such a proposition have started? I submit—I do it confidently—I submit that nowhere in authority, nowhere in the Constitution, nowhere in the decisions of the Supreme Court, nowhere in reason and logic, can the warrant for the contention or the support for it be found. And yet our friends are put into such sore straits; they put themselves into such an awkward position; they so recklessly and defiantly entered upon the work of doing this, that, and the other thing, without reference to the Constitution; of legislating in ways new and strange to our people and contrary to the genius of our Government; that, relying to-day upon this and the next day upon that, proclaiming to-day free trade and to-morrow protection, in grasping for straws, hoping by their aid to float, they fastened upon this new and strange doctrine that we have the Constitution outside of the State just where, and only where, the Congress chooses to put it.

Now, then, let us look at this question in another light. What is the Constitution in the Territory when Congress carries it there? Is it there as a Constitution or is it there as statute law? When Congress, by a provision like this section 5, extends to Hawaii the laws of the United States locally applicable, Congress does no more and no less than Congress would do if it were to write out word for word the entire body of those laws, embrace them in a bill, or in any number of bills, pass them, let them be approved by the President, and written anew in the statute book. That is just exactly what extending laws to the Territory amounts to—just that; no more and no less. This is the short way of enacting for the Territory the existing laws locally applicable to it. Now, then, is there anything more done with respect to the Constitution? Does the Congress of the United States make a constitution, as we understand the term—make a constitution (as the Constitution of the United States is for the States) the constitution also for a Territory by embodying it in an act of the Congress of the United States? Can that be done? Is that the way constitutions are made? Can constitutions be made in that way?

Then in extending the Constitution so far as "locally applicable" to Hawaii, the Congress of the United States is doing no more, and can do no more, than the Congress would do if we were to embody in a bill the Constitution of the United States word for word: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled," and then follow with the words of the Constitution. Let the President, after both bodies have passed the bill containing the Constitution and nothing else, affix his signature in approval, and then you have the Constitution "extended" to Hawaii just as completely, and no more completely, than it is extended by this act.

When the legislation is completed, what have you done? You have put the Constitution into the statute law of Hawaii, if you have done anything. That precisely and nothing more. Now, then, is that what gentlemen wish to accomplish by this measure? Did the gentleman who drew the bill wish to enact the words of the Constitution of the United States into statute law for Hawaii? Is that the purpose? I venture to say that it is not.

Assume, if you please, that the Constitution is not in force in Hawaii—those islands so very desirable for us, as so many people have said; those islands where the plague prevails, where contract labor is the rule, and slavery the result; where slavery, in fact, has been fostered and built up since the islands came under the control of the United States; the islands overrun with the cheapest labor of the Orient—if the Constitution is not over Hawaii, if the Constitution has not force and effect there, what force and effect will this legislation give it? Can you make a constitution for Hawaii by legislation of Congress? Why, sir, heretofore when our States have required constitutions they have made them themselves; they have been made by the people of the State. Then can you make the Constitution of the United States the constitution of Hawaii by Congressional enactment? It seems to me it is ridiculous to make such a contention.

Then how does this enactment carry the Constitution there? How can it carry the Constitution to Hawaii? How can a legislative act make over Hawaii a law supreme, as the Constitution of the United States is supreme over every sovereign State of this Union? How can it be done? And then when it is done, if it can be done, what about this vast Congressional power of which we have heard? The Congress which has the power to extend the Constitution to Hawaii—the Congress which, if it is right in now maintaining that Hawaii has not the Constitution of the United States and that it can put Hawaii under the shadow and protection of that Constitution—if it possesses that ample power—if it possesses that power which can not be derived from the Constitution, does it possess also the power to unmake, to undo? If it be true that the Constitution of the United States does not throw its protection over Hawaii and the people who dwell there to-day—if it be further true that after the passage of this act, if this section remains in it (but not otherwise), the Constitution of the United States will be over Hawaii—then I ask whether it is not also true that the same power which gives Hawaii the Constitution of the United States could take from Hawaii that Constitution? Who denies that proposition? If it is denied, why is it denied? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, can it be that Congress possesses this ample power—power so vast, so transcendent, that the Constitution does not restrain it, either because the Constitution has granted the power beyond recovery or because the power is derived from some other source—can it be true that the Congress of the United States possesses the vast and ample power to determine that a particular Territory of the United States or all of the territory outside of the States shall or shall not have the Constitution of the United States as the supreme governing law? Can that be true? And can it be true also that having once exercised this power, having once spread the Constitution over the Territory, Congress is powerless to withdraw it?

I suppose these gentlemen who contend for this ample power on the part of Congress will hardly assume or hardly assert that Congressional legislation, from the time of the extending of the Constitution to a Territory, and during the time the Constitution is permitted to have an abiding place there, can be independent of the Constitution. I think that can not be true. When the Constitution is there or gets there, when the ægis of the Constitution is over Hawaii, then, for the time being, Congress, in legislating for the Territory, it would seem, must legislate under the Constitution.

Mr. MCALEER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. If it be true that no part of the territory of the United States outside of the States is or can be under constitutional protection until Congress has put the territory and the people under the Constitution, then Congress must have the power and right to withdraw the Constitution from that territory and that people whenever it pleases. Now, who will dispute that proposition? Who finds fault or who can find fault with that reasoning?

It seems to me that those who would have Congress so mighty and the Constitution so weak are driven then to this absurdity—that the Constitution being carried by Congress to a Territory, the people of the Territory once being under the Constitution, Congress for the time being must legislate in subordination to the Constitution: but whenever Congress concludes to reassert its vast power, all it has to do is, by another act, to lift the Constitution, to gather the Constitution in and fold its wings of protection, and then to resume its own absolute sway, independent of the Constitution.

Gentlemen, what do you think of that doctrine as you follow it out? What respect, my friends, do you really have for your own judgment and your own logic, your own premises and your own treatment of them, when you proclaim or subscribe to the doctrine that the Constitution is nowhere outside of the States except where Congress carries it—that in legislating for the Territories the Constitution does not interfere with Congress?

I understand, and you understand, that this proposition lies at the very foundation of the Philippine question and the Puerto Rican question and the Hawaiian question, and the other questions that have arisen and will arise in this career which some gentlemen call progress, which others might properly call adventure—gathering in all that is loose around about, and then in providing a government, throwing away our constitutional safeguards in order to deal with our acquisitions, "our newly acquired possessions," in the way that necessity or cupidity may suggest. [Applause.]

I believe that no department or agency of the Government can escape from constitutional control otherwise than by violating the Constitution. I believe that the Constitution is in and over every act and action of Congress to sanction and sustain because in harmony with it, or to condemn and annul because in conflict with it. I believe the Constitution floats in the current of all Congressional legislation and directs the course of the stream. It is to Congressional life and action what the air we breathe is to human life and achievement. No legislation can escape from its supervising control, and wherever a law of Congressional enactment is in a Territory as well as in a State there is the Constitution also, having traveled in its own way, by its own conveyance, commanding Congress always and never commanded by Congress.

I did not intend to go into this question at length. It is worthy of some discussion. I may be wrong about it, but I think the time is coming and is not far distant when this proposition upon which so many gentlemen rest so much will receive more consideration than as yet has been given to it.

I believe the time is not far off—and I am warranted in that belief by reference to the decisions of the Supreme Court, by everything that we have upon that subject that deserves the name of authority, and, I am almost tempted to say, by everything which deserves the name of reason—I am led to the belief, and am confident in it, that the time is not far off when the doctrine in this country will be reestablished, to the satisfaction of many and the confusion of some others, that the Constitution is not merely a convenient little thing like a garment, to be taken off and put on; that the Constitution is not to be handled by the Congress of the United States as an overcoat might be handled by a servant in waiting—put on, pulled off, hung up or laid down, or even folded and stored away with spices and anti-moth preparations until a more convenient season for taking it out. [Laughter.]

I believe the doctrine soon will be reestablished in this country, to the satisfaction of many and to the confusion of some others, that the one thing that abides here, the one thing to which all of us must bow, the one thing to which all of us owe allegiance, the one thing which determines and measures the powers of Congress and of the President, whether the greatest or the smallest, that protects the feeblest and the mightiest, is the Constitution of the United States [applause on the Democratic side]; that it lives without Congressional action, and that the highest duty of Congress is to legislate under it and not against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KNOX. I yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOREING].

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Chairman, our Government was created without a pattern, and its founders commenced business without a dollar and without a foot of territory. Guided by the flag and not by the Constitution, they fought England seven years for our first possessions. To-day the American Republic stands in the forefront of the world's powers, without a peer in existence or a parallel in history. We have spanned this continent, compassed the seas, and planted our outposts at the threshold of the Asiatic countries, where we can command the trade and commerce of the world and protect our missionaries in all lands, and are now engaged in enacting a constitution for the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

We have the praise and admiration of the great civilized powers of the earth and no enemy in our front to stop our onward march around the globe. Yet there is a voice that calls us to halt and retreat. That voice comes from the rear. It is not the voice of Grant. It is not the voice of Stonewall Jackson. The men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray are at the front upholding the flag, with a united people and a prosperous country behind them. The voice that calls us back is the voice of the Tory in the Revolutionary days; the voice of Vallandigham and the Copperheads in the days of the civil war. It is the voice of the demagogue, the pessimist, and a few constitutional lawyers. Shall we obey that voice, or shall we state the philosophy of our politics and the religion of our Government in a broader patriotism, looking to a wider and higher national destiny?

I am well aware, Mr. Chairman, that our able statesmen are not all agreed about these matters. This comes of our free institutions and is the result of free thought, free speech, and a free press. But, Mr. Chairman, the people of this country may be divided into two classes. The time has never been when they might not have been divided into two classes. One class live for themselves alone, and the other class live for others as well as themselves. To the latter class we are indebted for American independence. To this class we are indebted for the preservation of the Federal Union and for the absolute freedom of all American citizens.

This class have built our churches, endowed our colleges, and inaugurated our systems of public instruction, and to them alone I am willing to intrust the destiny of our people and the fate of this nation.

Mr. Chairman, the idea of self-government was not born upon this continent. It came to us from across the seas, and after a trial and approval of a century and a quarter, may we not send it back with our greetings? The idea is modern, but it is not new. It is modern because it is imperishable. It is too pure to decay. Forms decay, words become obsolete, and languages die, but great ideas, truths, and principles live forever. The great Nazarene teacher, who taught as man never taught, and who spake as never man spake, suggested the idea of self-government to the human race and taught the doctrine of civil liberty two thousand years ago. When he appeared upon the scene as a teacher human slavery existed in every civilized nation in the world; but these wicked and degrading institutions have melted down before the sunlight of the gospel.

Our German ancestry, the Angles and the Saxons, carried the spirit of self-government from Germany into England in the fifth century. It struggled there for more than ten centuries against monarchical forms of government before it was driven to this country in search of a more congenial soil where it might develop and mature. It found lodgment in the patriotic heart of Washington and the brilliant intellect of Franklin; it found expression in the language of Jefferson; it found interpretation in the conscience of Lincoln, and it is finding dissemination in the patriotic judgment of William McKinley, to the credit of his brilliant Administration and the honor and glory of this nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When Mr. Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, he stated a powerful governmental fact—all men are created equal—the full meaning of which I do not believe he comprehended. It remained for Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipationist of the nineteenth century, the type of the American Republic, who was endowed by nature and, as Mr. Watterson claims, was inspired by the Almighty, to so interpret this fact as to make it speak the whole truth. Jefferson, Washington, and Franklin saw only the white man in that declaration, because they all indorsed the Constitution of the United States, which provided for the enslavement of the black man. But Mr. Lincoln, who possessed that invisible power of the human mind that could detect the invisible power that lurked in the great fact, saw as clearly as a sunbeam that it included the black man, and it is now dawning upon Mr. McKinley that the interpretation of Lincoln, that emancipated not only the bodies but the minds and consciences of men and gave this country a new civilization founded upon enlightened civil liberty, includes every shade of color between the white and the black man.

But how have we acquired our territory in this country? How has our Government grown up like its great type, Mr. Lincoln, from nothing to become everything?

In 1783 Great Britain ceded to us the 13 original colonies, embracing 815,000 square miles of territory. We obtained this under the flag and not under the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, we acquired our first possessions without having to run the gantlet of the constitutional lawyers, which every annexation has had to encounter.

I am always pleased to hear the speeches of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on account of his learning. I remember not long ago he took occasion to contrast the Constitution with the flag, claiming that the Constitution was the residuum of the Revolutionary war, that it was the guide and charter of the American people. I would remind him that the flag was the inspiration of the Revolutionary war. It expresses the patriotism of our people and the spirit of self-government.

I have as great respect for the Constitution as any man upon this floor. I would not speak disparagingly of that instrument, but I would also remind the gentleman that wherever there has been a conflict between the teaching of the Constitution and the teaching of the flag the Constitution has been in error and the flag has been correct.

I remember when I was a boy the Constitution taught me that the black man was property. The flag taught me that he was a man. The teaching of the flag prevailed and the Constitution was amended. The flag has never been amended, but the Constitution has been amended fifteen times to conform to the growth and development of the country and new conditions that have arisen, and to keep it in harmony with the teaching of the flag. You had as well think of amending the heavens that declare the glory of God or the firmament that showeth His handiwork, which day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge, as to think of amending the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that our fathers thought when they obtained this grant from England that they had all the territory they would ever need, for they made no express provisions in the Constitution by which we might acquire more. I have no doubt they had the idea then that they were forming a government within and for themselves and their posterity. But within twenty years from that date the great Louisiana purchase was made by Thomas Jefferson. He was censured and condemned for his reckless disregard of the Constitution and extravagant expenditure of the people's money—$15,000,000—for the purchase of territory for which the country had no use.

How is it to-day? That territory is worth $3,000,000,000. Why, its intelligent, cultured, and prosperous citizens propose to expend $15,000,000 in 1903 to celebrate the Louisiana purchase.

There is not money enough in this country, gold, silver, and paper, to buy the Louisiana purchase. Mr. Jefferson admitted that he stretched the Constitution until it cracked in order to make that purchase. He asked that the act ratifying the purchase be made in silence and without debate; and, in point of fact, there was more silence and secrecy about the passage of that act than there was about the act of 1873, by which some of our people think we lost our silver money. Here was the beginning of the American policy which was broader than the Constitution.

From that day to this the American policy has been broader than the Constitution. We have had seven great annexations of territory, by which we have increased our possessions to nearly 4,000,000 square miles of territory. Every great question that agitated the people of this country in the nineteenth century grew out of annexation. The public-land question, the tariff question, and the slavery question all grew out of annexation. If there had been no public domain added, there would have been no public-land question to be fought over between Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson. By reason of these annexations, farming lands became very cheap and farming very profitable. The statesmen saw that in order to encourage our people to manufacture their own goods, wares, and merchandise they must make manufacturing as profitable as farming, so they inaugurated a tariff system that has built up this country; and from that day we have had the tariff agitation until recent times. It commenced between Henry Clay, of Kentucky, and John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina.

I can not fix the day of the death of "tariff for revenue only," but I can come within four years of it. I believe that it appeared for the last time in the national Democratic platform of 1892. It failed to appear in the national Democratic platform of 1896. Somewhere between these two dates it winked out. Both the country and the Democratic party had an experience about that time that neither will soon forget. The slavery question likewise grew out of annexation, because the doctrine of slavery was firmly planted in the Constitution. It required a contempt of law and a revolution to free the original thirteen colonies from slavery. Whenever a new State was made the question arose as to whether it should be free or whether it should be slave. This controversy culminated in the irrepressible conflict that the eminent statesmanship of Henry Clay deferred for a third of a century, but could not prevent.

Mr. Chairman, the country we have acquired is the richest and most fertile and its people are the most cultured, intelligent, and happy of any race of people on the earth. Our country is, indeed, a chosen land. When you consider it from an agricultural standpoint, we could feed, clothe, and shelter twenty times our present population by agricultural pursuits alone. If you consider it from a manufacturing aspect, with our great producing capacity, that has been built up by our protective system and with the constantly increasing foreign demand for our manufactured articles, we could dispense with farming and support our population by manufacturing alone.

When you come to consider the wealth that is imbedded in the earth—our gold, silver, and copper mines, our coal fields, our oil, gases, and other minerals, our granite and marble of every hue and shade of color—this wealth is like the stars of heaven; it declares the glory of God. We are also a chosen people. In 1792 it was estimated that 85 per cent of our people were of the Anglo-Saxon race. It was very fortunate that we fell under the Anglo-Saxon civilization in the beginning, and it is exceedingly fortunate for us that every annexation made displaced Latin civilization, which has been succeeded by our Americanized Anglo-Saxon civilization.

We also have a chosen Government. It is conceded that the American Republic has been the most successful experiment of self-government the world has ever known. Now, with our brilliant history behind us and the enlightening power of our schools and churches, with our books and newspapers as numerous as the leaves of the forest, shall we not, in the faith of Caleb and Joshua, "go up and possess the land" that has come to us by the fortunes of war and by the act of purchase, not to deprive the inhabitants that come with these islands of their rights or possessions, but by our superior civilization teach them the arts of industry and inspire them to the pursuits of peace, cultivating among them the knowledge of a more enlightened civil liberty, and, if possible, secure to them and their posterity the blessings of that method of self-government that came to us as a heritage from our fathers.

Mr. Chairman, if by the pursuit of this beneficent policy we find a market for the surplus products of our farms and factories, who shall impugn, or have the right to impugn, our motive, question our patriotism, or criticise our policy? Certainly not they of our own household. I have been much pleased with what I have seen in this House with regard to our action in providing the pending bill. The Hawaiian Islands were converted to Christianity by American missionaries early in the twenties. In 1825 they incorporated into their code of laws the Ten Commandments. In 1829 they were recognized by the United States as a treaty-making power. In 1844 they were recognized by us as an independent government.

In 1900 they are knocking at our doors for admission and asking us to enact for them a constitution and code of laws. In doing so the Committee on Territories undertook as much as possible to make them conform to American ideas and American customs. I was pleased to see that the committee unanimously voted against a property qualification for the right of suffrage. I was pleased to know that we unanimously agreed to give them a fair election law and leave them as much as possible to control their own local affairs. I have been pleased at the spirit that has been shown here in regard to Puerto Rico on both sides of this House, notwithstanding we differ very widely as to what is the best method of relieving their distress.

But, Mr. Chairman, while we are providing for the islands of the sea, extending our civilization, holding up American national life before the world, are we going to allow the torchlight of liberty to be extinguished at the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln and the home of Henry Clay?

It is in no spirit of partisan acrimony that I refer to the situation in Kentucky. So far as the election law is concerned, we would be glad to exchange places with either the Hawaiian Islands or Puerto Rico. If you would rid us of the Goebel election law, you might put a tariff for two years on our products and tax to the full extent, if you please, of the Dingley law. We have two great trusts in Kentucky that would bear the burden of taxation; and if they were both taxed to death, the youth of the land would be safer and the country all the better off. Our Democratic friends get the benefit of both of them—the whisky trust and the tobacco trust. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Democrats do not drink. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOREING. No; they make and sell the liquor. Kentuckians do not drink as much as you think they do. My town is a local-option town and has not had an open saloon in it for twenty-five years, and we have not had a homicide there for twenty-five years; and yet we have been held up by the press of the country as a lawless people. I am glad to refer to this fact for the purpose of vindicating the people of my district. I do not know a more law-abiding, peaceable, and industrious citizenship anywhere in the United States than there is in Laurel County. Likewise the people of the Eleventh district are peaceable, industrious, intelligent, law-abiding people, and have been misrepresented and slandered in the public press in reporting the situation in Kentucky. Yes, if you will give us civil liberty in Kentucky, you may tax our products by a tariff. If you will be as kind to us as you are to Puerto Rico, and pay the money all back to us, and allow us all we collect ourselves on articles coming into Kentucky to build schoolhouses and make roads and lock and dam the Cumberland and Kentucky rivers, so we can put into market our coal and timber and oil and other products, then we will be as wealthy and prosperous as the great State of Pennsylvania or any other State in this Union.

But, Mr. Chairman, while the Goebel election law is the immediate cause of our troubles in Kentucky, there has been a series of wrongs perpetrated against the Republican party and the Republican counties in Kentucky. A system of unfair dealing and discrimination has been practiced against us which have led up to and made possible the passage of that law. In laying out the legislative and the senatorial and the Congressional districts the legislature of Kentucky has totally disregarded the plain provisions of their own constitution. I wish some of these constitutional lawyers would go down there and preach our State constitution to our State legislators. The thirty-third section of that instrument reads as follows:

The first general assembly after the adoption of the constitution—

That is our new constitution, that was adopted in 1891—

shall divide the State into 38 senatorial districts and 100 representative districts, as nearly equal in population as may be without dividing any county, except where the county may include more than one district, which shall constitute the senatorial and legislative districts for ten years.

Mr. TALBERT. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. BOREING. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. You say if they will give you civil liberty in Kentucky—I suppose you allude to the Federal Government?

Mr. BOREING. I do not care how we get it, so it comes back to us.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the gentleman think Kentucky can not take care of itself without Federal interference in these election laws?

Mr. BOREING. I am not raising the question of Federal interference. I am not asking that. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I will explain more explicitly when I get further on.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not mean to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BOREING. I understand that, and I am glad to have the gentleman from South Carolina ask me a question.

We are not asking for Federal interference; we are asking for a fair election law—a law fair to all parties. I want it to be the product of the best minds of both parties. I want it to be such a law as we can die and leave it to our children, believing that we are handing down to them the blessings of civil liberty as they were given to us by our fathers.

I call special attention to this provision:

Not more than two counties shall be joined to form a representative district.

Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BALL. Does the gentleman want Congress to change the constitution or the laws of Kentucky?

Mr. BOREING. We are not asking Congress to change the constitution of Kentucky.

Mr. BALL. What has Congress to do with the the representative districts in Kentucky—the senatorial and legislative districts? What have we to do with them?

Mr. BOREING. I have not asked Congress to regulate them.

Mr. BALL. You are making an appeal to Congress——

Mr. BOREING. I am simply stating a fact. I desire simply to put the facts before Congress and the country. And it has a bearing on the subject under discussion, because you gentlemen are reaching out in a humanitarian spirit and sympathizing with people who are oppressed. We want some of your sympathy.

Mr. BALL. How much majority did you give your governor in 1895 in your district?

Mr. BOREING. I do not remember. We gave him a pretty good majority.

Mr. BALL. How much majority did you give him in 1896, when President McKinley was running, and how long did you hold back the returns?

Mr. BOREING. We did not hold back the returns a day. And every vote that was given for Mr. McKinley was an honest vote. And we increased that majority in our last election under the Goebel law, when Democrats held and certified the election.

Mr. BALL. I do not doubt that every vote given was an honest vote. I am speaking of those votes which you counted in 1896, but which were not given.

Mr. BOREING. We did not count any that were not cast. We do not run the counting machine down there. The counting machine is run by the other side. The Goebel election law throws it open to them to run, if they have a mind to run it, and that is what I am now complaining of.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me give the gentleman a few facts. The legislature did meet in 1892 and did lay out the State into 38 senatorial and 100 representative districts. But how did they do it? I will refer first to my own district, the Seventeenth senatorial district of Kentucky, composed of the counties of Laurel, Pulaski, Whitley, Bell, Knox, Jackson, and Rockcastle, all in the Eleventh district, except Rockcastle. Those were perhaps six of the strongest Republican counties that could be laid out within one contiguous boundary. They had a population of 99,244. The ratio for senator was 48,911; and they gave us one senator, while the Democratic counties of Harrison, Nicholas, and Robertson, with 30,326 population, were given one senator.

I appeal to the gentleman as to whether that is fair. I appeal to the gentleman himself to say whether that is not taxation without representation. I appeal to the gentleman or any other member of this House to say whether we have not the same ground and grievance for revolution that our fathers had against Great Britain.

Mr. BALL. Revolution does not include the right of assassination.

Mr. BOREING. What was the gentleman's remark?

Mr. BALL. Are you appealing to the right of revolution?

Mr. BOREING. Oh, no; I am talking about rights we have not exercised.

Mr. BALL. I do not doubt your right to revolutionize if you want to do so; I am simply asking what Congress has to do with the assassination of a governor and your other troubles out in Kentucky.

Mr. BOREING. I have not said a word about assassination.

Mr. LACEY. Allow me to ask whether the Goebel law is not justified under article 12 of the constitution, which provides that—

All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness, and the protection of property. And for the advancement of these ends they have at all times an inalienable right to alter, reform, or abolish their governments in such manner as they may deem proper.

It will thus be seen that there is a special provision in the constitution of Kentucky authorizing revolution. Is not the Goebel law authorized by that provision?

Mr. BOREING. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question fully. I do not think the Goebel law could be authorized by anything else than revolution or usurpation. It does not, however, reform the State government, nor does it advance safety and happiness or protect property, but it does abolish government and subvert civil liberty.

But, Mr. Chairman, let me examine these figures a little further. This is not an isolated case. Take the county of Fayette, with 35,698 population. That county has one senator; but the Republican district composed of the counties of Perry, Letcher, Clay, Harlan, Floyd, Pike, Knott, Leslie, Martin, and Johnson, with a population of 85,166, has only one senator.

But this is not all. I will call your attention to the Republican county of Christian, with 34,113 population, which was given one representative, while the Democratic county of Davies, with 993 population less than Christian was given two representatives.

Christian is a strong Republican county. The Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth legislative districts, both Democratic, are in Warren County, with a population of 30,158, being 3,955 less than the Republican county of Christian. Thus, you see, Warren County has two representatives, while Christian has one.

Again, the Seventeenth district, composed of McLean County, with a population of 9,867—a Democratic county with a little over one-half the ratio for a member—was given one member. In open violation of the provisions of the constitution the counties of Clay, Jackson, and Owsley were all put into one district, with a population of 26,683, being 8,097 more than the constitutional ratio. These three are all strong Republican counties; likewise the four counties of Bell, Harlan, Perry, and Leslie, all Republican counties, and all put into one legislative district and given one member.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. BOREING. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not true that the court of appeals of Kentucky have upheld the reapportionment of the State and decided it to be constitutional?

Mr. BOREING. I really do not know. They have upheld the Goebel election law, which is worse, the judges dividing on partisan lines, 4 to 3.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desire the gentleman to state whether or not the court of last resort of the State has held the present apportionment of the State to be constitutional?

Mr. BOREING. I really do not know, but if they have, it is not fair and right. If it is, it is hard for a Republican to see how, since it disfranchises him.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, I will try to answer that later. I think I will have something to say.

Mr. BOREING. Of course. My argument is that it is unfair and that it is unconstitutional. Here is the plain language of the constitution, that speaks for itself.

Again, there is the Ninety-third district, composed of the Republican counties of Boyd and Lawrence, with a population of 31,735, given one representative, while Larue County, with a population of 9,433, has a representative. The Sixty-ninth district, composed of the two Republican counties of Knox and Whitley, with a territory of 930 square miles and a total population of 31,352, has but one representative, while the Twenty-third district, composed of the little city of Bowling Green and one or two small county precincts in Warren, with a population of 7,803, has a representative.

Mr. Chairman, I might carry this comparison further, but I deem the facts presented sufficient to convince the Congress of the United States and the country at large that our grievances are not imaginary, but real, and that they show why the election machinery has been transferred from the people to the legislature by this system of discriminating, which has practically disfranchised half the voters in the counties discriminated against in the election of State senators and representatives. The Goebel election law can be operated more successfully through the legislature than it can through the people. The legislature elects State board of election commissioners; State board appoints county commissioners, who hold the elections and report back to their masters.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, just a point right there. The gentleman has stated to the House what he conceives to be the wrongs and abuses that have been brought about by one party in Kentucky.

Mr. BOREING. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. Does he not think that Kentucky is entirely competent to deal with this question itself? If these wrongs have been committed, can they not be corrected by the people of Kentucky, and would not the proper place to air these things and to attempt these reforms be in the State of Kentucky instead of bringing them here to the Congress of the United States? I do not deny the gentleman's right to speak upon any question he pleases; but the point I want to get at is, is the State of Kentucky not entirely competent to deal with these questions herself as a sovereign State?

Mr. BOREING. As a sovereign State! That brings up a new question.

I want to say this: I submit the question as to whether we are mistaken about this being a nation and whether that provision of the Constitution of the United States that guarantees to every State a republican form of government is so much surplusage, and whether we are sovereign States? If we are sovereign States and the General Government has no right to interfere, then we must work out our own destiny.

Mr. TALBERT. I was speaking in regard to these particular conditions of things that the gentleman was referring to.

Mr. BOREING. I hope Kentucky will be able to work out her own destiny, but I give notice now to the gentleman from South Carolina and this House that, if we can not get rid of the Goebel election law in any other way, I will introduce a bill into this Congress asking for the passage of a Federal election law. I will not make this appeal in behalf of the colored race in the South; I will not make it in behalf of the Republican party in Kentucky. I will make it in behalf of the people of Kentucky, without regard to their politics or their racial origin. I will not ask for a force bill; I will not ask for a sectional election law, but I will ask for a fair election law for the whole United States that will enable the Federal court to reach out and take hold of these matters and pass upon the validity and constitutionality of the election laws in the States.

You talk about the Constitution extending itself. I will remind you, sir, that this deep-seated leprosy that is affecting the political franchise and spreading over the country must ultimately go to all the States. It may be that one party will smother out the rights of the minority in your State and mine and a different party will smother out the rights of the minority in other States.

Mr. Lincoln said this country could not stand part slave and part free; that it must ultimately be all slave or all free. So I declare to you that this Government can not stand with fair election laws in part of the States and unfair election laws in other States. We must have all fair, or ultimately they will all be unfair.

Now, if any gentleman here thinks that I am going beyond what I ought to say upon this subject as the Representative of the Eleventh district of Kentucky, I will say to him, come and stand where we are standing; come weep where we are weeping; come pray where we are praying; come feel what we are feeling, and then decide whether or not we will be justified in asking the Federal Congress to enact a law that will give every State in this Union a fair election and a republican form of government.

I will introduce into the RECORD, by permission, an editorial written by Mr. Watterson, at the time the Goebel election bill was pending. Mr. Watterson was once a member of Congress, but better known as the great editor of the Courier-Journal, the leading Democratic daily newspaper of the South, distinguished for his gifts and his high regard for the rights of man. His language needs no comment from me.

A COURIER-JOURNAL EDITORIAL.

The people may well stand aghast before the revolutionary election bill which has, like some dread monster, suddenly emerged from the fastnesses of passion and error through which the legislature has been threading its tortuous way. It is safe to say that the annals of free government will be sought in vain for anything approaching it in shameless effrontery and unconcealed deformity. The records of reconstruction furnish nothing to compare with it. The Brownlow despotism in Tennessee was considered tolerably reckless and tolerably thorough in its day. But the Brownlow despotism at its worst ventured upon nothing so boldly, wholly bad as this.

In all the force bills meditated by the radicals in Congress during the dark days of reconstruction there were discernible some pretense and pretext, some lingering memory of republican instincts and traditions. Even in the plebiscites of Louis Napoleon there was the outer display of a just electoral process and purpose. This force bill gives the voters of Kentucky not a ray of hope. It makes no claim or show of fairness. It places exclusively in the hands of three irresponsible persons to be named by the authors of the measure itself the entire electoral machinery of the State. That is the whole of it. In one word, and at one fell swoop, Kentucky is to become the subject of a triumvirate, which is to decide who shall hold office and who shall not. Nominally the people are to be permitted still to go through the form of elections. They are to be permitted still to vote. The ballot box is not actually abolished. But the triumvirate is in each and every case to cast up the returns and determine the result.

Naturally the question recurs, Why three commissioners, when one would serve the purpose quite as well? Thrift being the order of the day, why not an act naming a single commissioner to cast a single vote for the entire State, as is sometimes done in local board meetings? Why waste the hard-earned money of the taxpayer on a triumvirate, when a dictator would come so much cheaper.

Senator William Goebel is the reputed author of this bill. At least, it stands in his name, and in the legislature he is its foremost supporter. Among those who have latterly come into the foreground of Kentucky politics, this gentleman stands easily first as a master of political strategy. Self-possessed, able and tireless, and fearless, he seems to belong to the category of born leaders. Such men are capable of great public good or great public mischief. The Courier-Journal would not summarily nor willingly dismiss Senator Goebel to the latter classification. The measure with which he has linked his name and for the time being identified his fortunes is of sweeping viciousness and far-reaching evil.

The alien and sedition laws which engulfed and destroyed the old Federal party were not less oppressive and unrepublican in their character. But the coolest men are sometimes carried away by the passions that surround them, and this winter there has been nothing but passion at Frankfort. Indeed, of the present Democratic leaders in Kentucky, might one, without exaggeration or bathos, exclaim:

"O, judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason."

Senator Goebel is no worse than the rest; and except in this atrocious measure has shown himself something better. But, like Cæsar that was ambitious, he wants to be governor of Kentucky, and he sees, or he thinks he sees, a ready chariot to bear him thither in the electoral bill that bears his name.

Woeful, though not irretrievable, mistake; for, granting that with the machinery of this bill in his hands, his ambition may be, probably will be, gratified, what should it profit him if he gain the rulership of the universe and lose his own soul and along with it his good name, as the slayer of civil liberty?

Mr. Goebel is a young man. He is an aspiring man. He is an able and a brave man. May we not, as a friend, and without prejudice or misconstruction, tell him that there is something better, higher, nobler even than the governorship of Kentucky, and that is the love, the respect, the homage of good men and women? Were it not wiser to wait until his time has come and to take his chances fairly among his rivals, than, armed like a bandit, to hold up the people and the State and after a brief, unhonored revel in office, to pass from the scene discredited forever? For nothing can be surer than that if this bill should become a law it is only a question of time, and of a very short time, when all concerned in its passage will be running to cover from the wrath of an outraged people, and when those responsible for its being will have to pay the forfeit of their folly and crime in everlasting ignominy and disgrace.

But the Goebel bill will never be enacted into law. The Democrats of Kentucky have not sunk so low as that. There is a limit even to the fury of factional passion. There are bounds set upon the prosperous rapacity of sectional leadership. The people can not have gone completely and incurably mad. There is yet some grace left in the manhood of Kentucky to rise in its might and to say to this wicked attempt to steal its birthright of freedom in open day and before its very eyes, "I forbid!"

The time is short, but everywhere throughout Kentucky there should be public meetings held to protest, and to send delegations to Frankfort to protest, against this monstrous usurpation of power by a few unscrupulous and designing men. If this be not done, and done quickly and decisively, then are free elections and free government at an end in Kentucky and the State given over into the keeping of a clique of self-appointed party managers, not to be recovered by the people short of a political revolution. With the machinery of this Goebel bill in his hands, Mr. Goebel becomes as completely master of the situation in Kentucky as Diaz in Mexico or Menelek in Abyssinia.

Like all measures gotten up to serve pretended party purpose, yet in reality aimed to promote private advantage, this election bill is opposed to every conceivable Democratic interest. The first election, or rather spurious election, to be held under its operations and restrictions will be for Congressmen next November. All the Republicans shall need to do will be to protest against the rulings of the triumvirate in each district, send a delegation to Washington, and rely upon the Republican Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, who makes up the roll of the next Congress, to enter their names. The issue thus joined may determine the party complexion of the next Congress, and against the Democrats, since the Republicans will have first say. In case of a disputed State election it is a question whether the State courts would not throw out the law as unconstitutional. Assuredly the act itself, if passed, might be described as "an act to deprive the Commonwealth of Kentucky of a republican form of government," for, whereas most force bills have preserved the outward forms of Republicanism, this bill defiantly creates a three-man power, under a one-man rule, as odious to liberty as the directory in France under Barras, or the consulate, after Napoleon had captured the revolution, as Mr. Goebel seems to have captured the Democratic party machinery.

In point of fact, the Democratic party, as a party, has everything to lose and nothing to gain, for, even as to the immediate future, when such desperate expedients are resorted to, it is impossible to predict with certainty exactly how they will work, while as to their ultimate results there can be no manner of doubt. Such measures always react and rebound. The brood of evils they invoke always comes home to roost. The very suggestion of so reckless a resort is a confession of weakness. It is an open declaration that its authors dare not meet the people face to face and in the open. It is the resurrection out of the depths of infamy and disgrace, where the people laid them, of worn-out and cast-off radical methods and policies, and their application to the supposed exigencies of a faction of Democratic politicians who proclaim themselves to be, except for this device, both impotent and bankrupt.

The Courier-Journal speaks warmly because it feels warmly. But it would arraign the motives, question the integrity, of no man. As it values its honor, it would assail the honor of none other; and surely it has no factional interest to support. Cast out by all factions, an outlaw in the house where it was once a master—and willing, yea, glorying in its subjection and its martyrdom for truth's sake and its country's sake, if good shall come to either—what boots it to us which aspirant is governor of Kentucky, or who sits in the high place of the land?

This monstrous usurpation of power needs no explaining. It is so simple a child may read and understand it. But no power can stop it unless the people of Kentucky, not yet wholly lost to liberty, manhood, and self-respect, arise in their majesty, and arise at once, to call off the maddened dogs of war whom passion and faction have let loose at Frankfort, and who, having had a taste of blood, would rend the very eagles that guard the Commonwealth limb from limb, leaving the people only the bare and worthless bones.

The long train of evils predicted by Mr. Watterson that would follow the enactment of the Goebel election law have already been visited, in part at least, upon the people of Kentucky. We already have two sets of State officers claiming to have been elected for the same term. One set elected by the people, and another set elected by the boards of contest. And the question to-day is whether the voice that comes from the booth or the voice that comes from the legislature shall prevail. As a man of peace I favor a peaceful solution of these troubles, and I therefore believe that if the Federal courts of the country have not power to pass upon and settle these disputed questions that we have reached a period in our country's history when such power should be conferred upon them by Congressional legislation, because under the political excitement that prevails the local courts are as partisan as the political parties. As further evidence of the fact that the Goebel election law throws wide open to fraud our elections whenever and wherever the election officers are corrupt enough to practice fraud, I desire also to insert as part of my remarks a letter from the Hon. South G. Trimble, speaker of the present legislature of Kentucky, to his friend, W. E. Thompson. It is as follows:

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: I will preface the contents of this letter by saying that you have not a better friend in Franklin County than I am, and it is my friendship for you that I write this letter. You were indicated by the county committee as one of the election commissioners for this county.

No better man could have been appointed; but it is an unenviable position, and one that you should not accept. Our county is all right, safely Democratic; but city elections can not be won with a fair count, and you know that as well as I do. Incompetent, unreliable Republican judges will have to be appointed. The right of the Republicans to indicate who shall represent them as judges, etc., will have to be ignored, and the election commissioners will have to do this or receive the ill will of the city Democrats. I would not do it, for I could not conscientiously do so and know that you would not; therefore my advice to you is to refuse to act.

I had a talk with Judge Pryor on the subject, and he said if you would refuse to act he would appoint anyone that we might indicate, which would be Ben Marshall. You know Ben is so partisan that he thinks that anything is right that helps the Democrats. Think this matter over, and use your best judgment, and if you conclude not to accept, write to me immediately and I will have the change made. I will also see that your interests are represented in the appointment of officers on your side of the river. Let me hear from you at once.

Sincerely your friend,

SOUTH TRIMBLE.

MR. W. E. THOMPSON, Frankfort, Ky.

Thompson's answer is as follows:

FLAGFORK, KY., August 18, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 13th of August in regard to election commissioners for the county received, and in reply will say my confidence in your sincerity about this matter compels me to refuse to accept the appointment of election commissioner, for if I have to do a dishonorable act I will not accept. Show this letter to Judge Pryor, that he may act regardless of the county committee's recommendation.

Most respectfully, yours,

W. E. THOMPSON.

MR. SOUTH TRIMBLE, Frankfort, Ky.

Mr. Trimble is a reputable gentleman and a supporter of Mr. Goebel and in harmony and accord with what is known as the Goebel Democracy in Kentucky, and his letter speaks for itself, and shows what he thought of the fairness and the soundness of the Goebel election law.

I also insert as a part of my remarks this item taken from what purports to be the correspondence between Mr. Watterson and Mr. Belmont, of New York:

The Democratic State ticket just nominated will certainly be elected, under the operation of the Goebel law. The result is not left to chance.

That is what Mr. Watterson is reported to have written to Mr. Belmont. Now, do any of you have any difficulty in construing that language? Does not that mean that the election will not necessarily depend upon the votes cast, but upon the votes counted?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOREING. I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that privilege under the order made by the House.

Mr. BOREING. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] asked me if the apportionment of Kentucky has not been upheld by a decision of the court of appeals. By this interrogatory he concedes the truth of what I have stated about the apportionment. He also admits that the Goebel election law is partisan.

If it be true, Mr. Chairman, that the court of appeals in Kentucky has upheld an unfair apportionment and partisan election law, then he sustains my contention and justifies me in my belief that the disputed questions growing out of our elections and the validity and constitutionality of our election law ought to be settled in a more impartial court.

My attack is upon the Goebel election law and not upon the officers who have administered that law; nor have I discussed nor do I propose to discuss Mr. Goebel. No eulogy upon his life and character answers objections to an iniquitous law that bears his name. I do not charge that all elections held under the Goebel election law have been fraudulent. I do not believe they have been. But I do assert and maintain that wherever we have had fair elections under that law it is due to the fact that the officers of the election were better than the law. We do not want an election law under which we may have a fair election, but we want an election law under which we must have a fair election. In this enlightened age of the world we must have election laws that command the respect and confidence of all our people. If we would guard the sacredness of the ballot, the law must be nonpartisan in spirit and in form.

It has been said that the State canvassing board under the old law in Kentucky was not nonpartisan; that the governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and attorney-general of state composed the board. That is true; but it must be borne in mind that this canvassing board was not a source of power to hold elections. They exercised no powers whatever, direct or remote, in the appointment of election officers and holding the elections. Under the old law the county judge of the county appointed the election officers and the county judge and county clerk and sheriff were the returning boards for the counties. They were elected by the people and responsible to the people, and required to execute bonds for the faithful performance of their duties.

But under the operations of the Goebel law the county commissioners, who appoint the election officers and receive the returns of the elections and certify them up to the State board, are not responsible to the people. They do not get their power to act from the people. They get their power from the State board, and the State board gets its power from the legislature. The legislative districts are so laid out as to give the Democratic party the advantage of electing members with half as many votes as are required to elect the Republican members. The State board of election commissioners have full power to remove the county commissioners at any time. They can appoint them all of one political party if they choose. The county commissioners have full power to remove the election officers at any time. The South Trimble letter in this RECORD illustrates the advantage that may be given one party over another in the matter of selecting election officers. It will be observed, too, that no bond is required of either the State or county commissioners for the faithful performance of their duties, and no penalties attached for the punishment of either State or county commissioners in case they ignore the law in appointing election officers in the voting precincts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in my opposition to this law I am backed by the solid Republican party in Kentucky and am supported by my Republican colleagues in the Senate and in the House. My Democratic colleague, who assumes to defend the Goebel election law upon this floor, is not backed by anything like all of his party, and he does not have the united support of his Democratic colleagues in the Senate and the House.

I have been asked to point out the particular frauds in the elections held under the Goebel election law, but it is my purpose just now to point out the defects in the law itself, which has just commenced to bear fruit. It has been alleged and never denied that more than 100 of the election officers in Louisville were removed on the night before the election, and it is a notorious fact that in order to defeat Taylor and the Republican State ticket and elect Goebel and the Democratic State ticket the entire vote of the city of Louisville and four counties in the Tenth district were thrown out, not only by the legislature but also by the State board of election commissioners, sitting as a board of contest, and more than a quarter of a million people disfranchised.

Whatever may be the outcome of the situation in Kentucky and whoever may hold the offices, the fact that Gen. W. S. Taylor was nominated by acclamation at the Republican State convention and was elected by the legal voters of Kentucky under the operations of the Goebel law remains and will go down the ages wherever the truth of history is known. It is a matter of record that Governor Taylor and the Republican ticket elected along with him received their certificates of election from the State commissioners appointed under the operation of the Goebel law and have been properly inducted into their offices, and I give it as my candid judgment that if the courts of the country uphold the action of the legislature and the State board of election commissioners in their decision as boards of contest that Mr. Beckham and the Democratic ticket have been elected, Governor Taylor and the other State officers will acquiesce in that decision, although it may be a "Dred Scott" decision. If an appeal or a writ of error from the Kentucky court of appeals to the Federal court lies, under the agreement between the attorneys for these parties, Governor Taylor will doubtless take that appeal. If not, it is my belief that he will submit to the decision of the court of last resort to him, and the matter will be carried back to the people and the fight for the restoration of civil liberty will be peacefully waged at the polls in November next.

In further answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL], in reference to the vote in the Eleventh district in 1896, I desire to remind him that the gain in the vote of 1896 over the vote of 1895 in the Eleventh district was 11 per cent less than the gain in the First district of Kentucky, represented by my colleague [Mr. WHEELER]. And I desire to further call his attention to the fact that the majority in the Eleventh district was larger in 1899 than in 1896, and notwithstanding the charge of tissue ballots was made and investigated by the legislature sitting as a board of contest, they failed utterly to find a single fraud or even an excuse for throwing out votes in the Eleventh Congressional district, but found their excuses for cutting down the Republican majority to a minority in counties outside of the Eleventh district. The Eleventh district, therefore, has a certificate of character from the Goebel contest boards in Kentucky, whatever that may be worth to them.

I may further remind the gentleman from Texas that the county of Whitley, with a Republican majority of from 2,000 to 2,500, was by this same system of unfair dealing and discrimination changed from one appellate district to another just preceding an election for judge of the court of appeals, so as to deprive the people of that county of a vote for appellate judge for a quarter of a century; also that the boundary of the Eleventh Congressional district, which is now 300 miles long and one county wide in places, has been the subject of constant changes by the legislature, in order to secure the election of Democratic Congressmen in the adjoining districts. All this has been done without regard to the rights of the minority or the geography of the country.

I might further remind him that the Democratic State legislature at the session at which the Goebel election law was enacted passed what was known as the prison bill, by which they turned the Republican officers and guards of the penitentiaries and the superintendents of the charitable institutions out of office in the middle of their term and distributed the places among the members of the legislature, as a remuneration, as was alleged, for their support of the Goebel election bill. So the gentleman's ill-advised insinuations against the Republicans in the Eleventh district betrays his want of knowledge about Kentucky affairs.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I invite special attention to that feature of section 1 of the Goebel law that provides for the filling of vacancies in the State board. In case of two vacancies it authorizes the remaining member, when the legislature is not in session, to appoint two additional members to fill the vacancies. In this connection, I desire to state that the first board was composed of Judge W. S. Prior, Judge Ellis, and Mr. Poynts. These three gentlemen met as a canvassing board, tabulated the returns that came before them from the county boards, and found that, according to the face of the returns, W. S. Taylor and the Republican ticket were elected.

Accordingly, Judge Prior and Judge Ellis decided to give certificates to the Republican ticket, from which Mr. Poynts dissented. After signing the certificates and delivering same, Prior and Ellis resigned, and Mr. Poynts proceeds to fill the vacancies, as is alleged, by the appointment of persons whose views were known to be in harmony with his own. Why Prior and Ellis resigned at this critical juncture the public has not been advised, but the action taken in the matter illustrates the practical workings of the Goebel law and the self-perpetuating power of the State board of election commissioners, and how it is possible, both with the State board and the county boards, for a member whose conscience is not equal to the tasks assigned, to step aside and allow his place to be filled by another who possibly, as Mr. Trimble expresses it, is sufficiently partisan to justify any act that may give his party success.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Goebel election law is monstrous, in that it makes the State board of commissioners a self-perpetuating machine, which is the source and end of power, places it above the law, and makes its decisions final. Now, in order that Congress may be advised and the public informed as to what the Goebel election law is, within itself, I will insert as part of my remarks the instrument in full, and respectfully and earnestly request every member of this House to carefully read and consider, then decide whether or not he believes, as an American patriot, that this law is wise or just in its provisions, and whether or not the American people, with their historic love of liberty, inspired by the most brilliant future that has ever opened up before an illustrious Republic, can afford to have such an election law fastened upon any portion of their free people?

CHAPTER 13.—AN act to further regulate elections.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, The general assembly shall at its present session elect three commissioners who shall be styled "The State board of election commissioners." They shall hold office for a term of four years and until their successors are elected and qualified. They shall be citizens and electors of Kentucky and not less than 25 years old. In the year 1902 and every fourth year thereafter the general assembly shall elect such commissioners. Said commissioners shall qualify by taking before the clerk of the court of appeals an oath faithfully to perform their duties according to law. Of such qualifications said clerk shall make a certificate, which shall be noted upon the record of the proceedings of said board and preserved among the records. Said board shall elect one of its members chairman, who shall preside at its meetings. It shall appoint a secretary, who shall hold office during the pleasure of the board.

The board shall prescribe the duties of the secretary and fix his compensation, which shall not exceed $250 per annum. The board shall keep a record of its acts, orders, findings, judgments, and all of its proceedings. A majority of said board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of all business of the board, and a majority of said board may make any order, finding, judgment, or do any act or thing that the board is authorized or empowered to make or do. If a vacancy occurs in said board whilst the general assembly is in session, said vacancy shall be filled by election by the general assembly. If a vacancy or vacancies occur in said board whilst the general assembly is in vacation, the same shall be filled by appointment by the remaining member or members of said board. Resignations from said board shall be in writing, directed to the board, and filed among the records thereof.

SEC. 2. Said State board of election commissioners shall annually, not later than the month of September, appoint three election commissioners for each county in this Commonwealth, who shall be styled the "county board of election commissioners;" such county election commissioners shall be citizens and electors of the county for which they are appointed, and shall be not less than 25 years old. Before entering upon the duties of their office they shall qualify by taking, before some officer authorized by law to administer oaths, an oath faithfully to discharge their duties as such commissioners according to law.

The officer administering such oath shall make a certificate thereof, which shall be filed in the office of the county court clerk of the county. Said board shall elect one of its members chairman, who shall preside at its meetings. A majority of such board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of all business of the board, for the doing of any act or thing that the board may do, and the making of any order, finding, or judgment of the board. Any member of such county board may be at any time removed from office by the State board of election commissioners. All vacancies in such county boards shall be filled by said State board, but until such vacancy or vacancies be filled by appointment by said State board, any vacancy or vacancies in any such county board may be temporarily filled by appointment by the remaining members or member of such county board. Said county board shall keep a record of its proceedings, which shall be a public record, and be kept in the office of the county court clerk.

SEC. 3. Said county board shall annually, not later than the month of October, appoint for each election precinct in the county two judges, one clerk, and one sheriff of election, to act as such in their precinct, all of whom shall be discreet, qualified voters of the precinct for which they are appointed, and shall hold their offices until their successors are appointed and qualified; and so long as there are two distinct political parties in this Commonwealth the judges, clerk, and sheriff of election, in all elections by the people under the Constitution and laws of the United States and under the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth, shall be so selected and appointed as that one of the judges at each place of voting shall be of one political party and the other judge of a different political party; and there shall be the like difference at each voting place between the sheriff and clerk of election: Provided, That there be a sufficient number of qualified persons of each political party resident in the precinct with which to fill said offices.

No person shall be eligible as an officer of election who has not been a resident householder in the precinct for which he is appointed for not less than one year next preceding his appointment, or who has anything of value bet or wagered on the result of such election, or who is a candidate to be voted for at such election, or who is not capable of reading the constitution of the Commonwealth in English, and of writing a plain and legible hand. It shall be the duty of said county board of election commissioners to test all such election officers as to their qualifications before appointment. If at any time before an election it shall be made to appear to the county board of election commissioners by the affidavit of two or more qualified voters of the precinct, or other evidence, that any election officer is disqualified under the provisions of this act then said county board shall investigate said matter, and determine whether such officer is disqualified, and such a decision shall be final; and if he be found disqualified such officer shall be removed from office and a qualified person of the same political party as the officer removed shall thereupon be appointed in his stead.

Said county board of election commissioners may at any time remove from office any election officer and fill the vacancy thus occasioned. And said county board may at any time fill any vacancy in the office of election officer. The county board of election commissioners shall give due notice of said appointments of election officers to the sheriff of the county, who shall, at least ten days before the next ensuing election, give each judge, clerk, and sheriff written notice of his appointment.

SEC. 4. Should the county board of election commissioners fail to appoint such officers of election, or either of said officers fail to attend for thirty minutes after the time for commencing the election, or refuse to act, the officers in attendance shall appoint a suitable person or persons to act in his or their stead for that election. If none of said officers shall appear, as herein required, the qualified voters present shall elect the officers of election viva voce, as nearly as possible in conformity with the provisions of this act, who shall serve as such officers. Each officer of election shall before entering upon the duties of his office, take an oath faithfully to discharge his duties as such officer before some person authorized to administer an oath, or if no such officer be present, it may be administered by the clerk of the election, who in turn shall be sworn by one of the judges of election.

SEC. 5. Said county board of election commissioners shall constitute a board for examining and canvassing the election returns of each county and awarding and issuing certificates of election. Any two of the members of said board may constitute the board, but if either be a candidate he shall have no voice in the decision of his own case. If from any cause two of the members of the board can not act, in whole or in part, in examining and canvassing the returns, their places shall be supplied as in case of vacancies in such board. Within two days next after an election the sheriff shall deposit with the clerk of the county court the returns from the different precincts. On the next day the said county board of election commissioners shall meet in the clerk's office, between 10 and 12 o'clock in the morning, open and canvass the returns of such election and give triplicate or more written certificates of election, over their signatures, of those who have received the highest number of votes for any office exclusively within the gift of the voters of the county, one copy of the certificate to be retained in the clerk's office, another delivered to each of the persons elected, and the other forwarded by the county clerk to the secretary of state at the seat of government.

For offices not within such gift, they shall give duplicate or more written certificates, over their signatures, of the number of votes given in the county, city, town, district, or precinct, particularizing therein the precinct at which the votes were given, one copy to be retained in the clerk's office, one delivered to the sheriff, and one, in case of municipal or district election, to the common council of said municipality or governing authority of such district. The poll books shall thereafter remain in the clerk's office as parts of its records. So also shall the certificates of any precinct judges which may have been used in the absence of the poll book of that precinct.

SEC. 6. Where two or more counties vote together in the choice of a representative or senator, the canvassing boards of election of the respective counties shall make duplicate written certificates, over their signatures, of the number of votes given in the counties for such representative or senator, one copy to be retained in the clerk's office of such county and the other to be sent immediately by mail by said board to the canvassing board of the county in such district having the largest population, which last-named board shall, between 10 and 12 o'clock in the morning of the second Monday after the election, meet in the clerk's office of their county, compare the certificates of the canvassing boards of the several counties, and therefrom give triplicate certificates of election, in writing, over their signatures, of the persons who appear to have received the largest number of votes, one copy of the certificate to be retained in the clerk's office, another delivered to the person elected, and the other forwarded to the secretary of the State at the seat of government.

SEC. 7. The certificate of election of a county officer shall be, in substance, in the following form: "Commonwealth of Kentucky, sct.: We, A, B, and C, duly authorized to canvass the returns of the county of ——, do certify that at an election held in said county on the —— day of —— E F was duly elected to fill the office of ——." The certificate of election of a justice of the peace or constable shall be altered to show that the election was held in a named district.

SEC. 8. When the election of a governor or lieutenant-governor is contested, a board for determining the contest shall be formed in the manner following:

First. On the third day after the organization of the general assembly which meets next after the election the Senate shall select by lot three of its members and the house of representatives shall select by lot eight of its members, and the eleven so selected shall constitute a board, seven of whom shall have power to act.

Second. In making the selection by lot the name of each member present shall be written on a separate piece of paper, every such piece being as nearly similar to the other as may be. Each piece shall be rolled up, so that the names thereon can not be seen nor any particular piece ascertained or selected by feeling. The whole so prepared shall be placed by the clerk in a box on his table, and after it has been well shaken and the papers therein well intermixed, the clerk shall draw out one paper, which shall be opened and read aloud by the presiding officer, and so on until the required number is obtained. The persons whose names are so drawn shall be members of the board.

Third. The members of the board so chosen by the two houses shall be sworn by the speaker of the house of representatives to try the contested election and give true judgment thereon, according to the evidence, unless dissolved before rendering judgment.

Fourth. The board shall, within twenty-four hours after its election, meet, appoint its chairman, and assign a day for hearing the contest, and adjourn from day to day as its business may require.

Fifth. If any person so selected shall swear that he can not, without great personal inconvenience, serve on the board, or that he feels an undue bias for or against either of the parties, he may be excused, by the house from which he was chosen, from serving on the board, and if it appears that a person so selected is related to either party, or is liable to any other proper objection on the score of its partiality, he shall be excused.

Sixth. Any deficiency in the proper number so created shall be supplied by another draw from the box.

Seventh. The board shall have the power to send for persons, papers, and records, to issue attachments therefor, signed by its chairman or clerk, and issue commissions for taking proof.

Eighth. Where it shall appear that the candidates receiving the highest number of votes given have received an equal number, the right to the office shall be determined by lot, under the direction of the board. Where the person returned is found not to have been legally qualified to receive the office at the time of his election, a new election shall be ordered to fill the vacancy: Provided, The first two years of his term shall not have expired. Where another than the person returned shall be found to have received the highest number of legal votes given, such other shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office.

Ninth. No decision shall be made but by the vote of six members. The decision of the board shall not be final nor conclusive. Such decision shall be reported to the two houses of the general assembly for the further action of the general assembly, and the general assembly shall then determine such contest.

Tenth. If a new election is required it shall be immediately ordered by proclamation of the speaker of the house of representatives, to take place within six weeks thereafter, and on a day not sooner than thirty days thereafter.

Eleventh. When a new election is ordered or the incumbent adjudged not to be entitled, his powers shall immediately cease, and, if the office is not adjudged to another, it shall be deemed to be vacant.

Twelfth. If any member of the board willfully fails to attend its session he shall be reported to the house to which he belongs, and thereupon such house shall, in its discretion, punish him by fine and imprisonment, or both.

Thirteenth. If no decision of the board is given during the then session of the general assembly, it shall be dissolved, unless by joint resolution of the two houses it is empowered to continue longer.

SEC. 9. After an election for governor, lieutenant-governor, or other office elective by the votes of the whole State, or more than one county, or for a judge of the court of appeals, clerk of that court, circuit judge, Commonwealth's attorney, Representatives in the Congress, or electors of President or Vice-President, or for or upon questions or constitutional amendments submitted to a vote of the people, it shall be the duty of the board of canvassers of returns for each county immediately after the examination of such returns, to make out two or more certificates in writing, over their signatures, of the number of votes given in the county for each of the candidates for any of said offices, and the number of votes for or against such questions or constitutional amendments. One of the certificates shall be retained in the clerk's office, another the clerk shall send by the next mail, under cover, to the secretary of state at the seat of government.

SEC. 10. Said State board of election commissioners, and in the absence of either, the other two, shall be a board for examining and canvassing the returns of election for any of the offices named in the last section of this act.

First. It shall be the duty of said board, when the returns are all in, or on the fourth Monday after the election, whether they are in or not, to make out in the office of the secretary of state, from the returns made, duplicate certificates, in writing, over their signatures, of the election of those having the highest number of votes, one certificate to be retained in the office and the other sent by mail to the person elected. If all the returns are not made, the right to contest an election shall not be impaired.

Second. In the case of the election of a Representative in the Congress there shall be three certificates, one to be retained in the office, another sent by mail to the Clerk of the House of Representatives at the seat of Federal government.

Third. It shall be the duty of the secretary of the State, immediately after the comparison of the returns, to cause a statement therefrom of the votes given in every county for each candidate to be published in two newspapers.

Fourth. If two or more persons shall be found to have received the highest and an equal number of votes for the same office so that the election can not be determined among the candidates by a plurality of the votes, it shall be determined by lot in such manner as the board may direct, and in the presence of not less than three other persons.

Fifth. If one or more of the persons voted for as electors of President is elected, then he or they, when convened to vote for President, shall determine which of the candidates having an equal number of votes shall be deemed to be elected without casting any lot therefor. But if none is elected, then the board shall determine the election by lot between those having the highest and equal number of votes, except that they shall be arranged and drawn for in classes, according to their known pledges to vote for the different candidates so that the whole vote of the State may be given to the same person.

SEC. 11. Where the canvassing board of two or more counties on comparison of the returns, or the board of canvassers for a county, find that two or more have received the highest and equal number of votes for the same office, they shall by lot determine which of the candidates is elected.

SEC. 12. Said State board of election commissioners, or any two of them, shall be a board for determining the contested election of any officer other than governor or lieutenant-governor, elected by the votes of the whole State, or of a judge or clerk of the court of appeals, circuit judge, or Commonwealth's attorney.

First. Each member of the board, before entering on his duties as such, shall be sworn by some judge or justice to try the contested election and give true judgment thereon according to the evidence.

Second. A majority of the board shall be necessary to a decision, which shall be in writing, and signed in duplicate by the members concurring therein, one copy to be retained in the office of the secretary of state, and the other delivered to the successful party or sent to him by mail.

Third. The board shall have power to send for persons, papers, and records, to issue attachments therefor, signed by its chairman, swear witnesses by its chairman or secretary, and issue commissions for taking proof.

Fourth. Where it shall appear that the candidates receiving the highest number of votes given have received an equal number the right to the office shall be determined by lot, under the direction of the board; where the person returned is found not to have been legally qualified to receive the office at the time of his election, a new election shall be ordered to fill the vacancy: Provided, The first two years of his term shall not have expired. Where another than the person returned shall be found to have received the highest number of legal votes cast, such other shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office. The decision of the board shall be final and conclusive.

Fifth. The governor shall immediately after such decision issue the proper commission, or order a new election, as the case may require.

SEC. 13. The county board of election commissioners, or any two of them, shall be a board in each county, with like powers as those mentioned in the next preceding section, for determining the contested election of any officer elective by the voters of the county, or any district therein, excepting members of the general assembly, and also of any police judge, clerk, marshal, or other elective municipal officer, where there is no other provision of law for determining the contested election of such municipal officers. The board shall be governed by the rules mentioned in the next preceding section, where the same are applicable to its duties. The decision of the board shall be given in writing, and signed in triplicate, one copy to be entered on the minutes of the board, another delivered to the successful party, and the other, when necessary for obtaining a commission, sent by mail to the secretary of state. When the decision so requires, a writ for a new election shall immediately be issued.

SEC. 14. Said State board of election commissioners shall hold its sessions at the seat of government, at Frankfort, where a suitable room for them shall be provided in some of the State buildings. The members of the board shall be paid for all their services under this act $5 per day while so in session: Provided, That no member of said board shall be paid more than $100 for his services in any year. Said board shall provide itself with necessary books, papers, material, and postage to enable it to perform the duties with which it is charged by this act. The chairman of said board shall certify to the auditor of public accounts the money so expended by said board, and the sums that the members of said board and its secretary are entitled to be paid under this act, and thereupon the auditor shall draw his warrant upon the treasurer for the sum so certified, to the end that the same may be paid out of the treasury.

SEC. 15. The county board of election commissioners shall be paid for all services they may render under this act, $2 per day while actually in session; but no member of such board shall be paid more than $50 for his services during any year. Said board may provide itself with necessary books and stationery to enable it to perform its duties under this act; the amount of such expenditure and the number of days the members of said board were actually in session shall be certified by the chairman of the board to the fiscal court of the county and paid out of the county funds.

SEC. 16. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are, to the extent of such conflict, repealed.

SEC. 17. Because of the frauds that are now perpetrated in elections in this Commonwealth there is an emergency that this act take immediate effect, and this act shall take effect upon its approval by the governor or its passage.

Vetoed by the governor March 10, 1898.

Passed the senate on the 11th day of March, 1898, the objections of the governor to the contrary notwithstanding.

Passed the house of representatives on the 11th day of March, 1898, the objections of the governor to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. McALEER. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I had sincerely hoped that it would not be necessary for anyone again to recur to the Kentucky situation on this floor. I am constrained to admit that the position of the beloved old Commonwealth is one of humiliation. No one feels more keenly than myself the great injustice that is being done Kentucky and her chivalrous people by the reports that are daily sent out from her capital. No one knows better than myself, unless it be the Representative from the Eleventh district [Mr. BOREING], what element of her citizenship has brought these misfortunes and afflictions upon our State.

Now, sir, without any temper, with a desire to be impartial and fair, with the determination to do absolute justice and to speak the plain truth, it matters not whom it may wound, I ask the patience of the House while I give some account of the situation in Kentucky and what led up to the present unfortunate state of affairs.

This is a local controversy. It is true it seems to be the practice in these latter days for some men to come to the House of Representatives to discuss party differences that occur in the States. They have no place here, I think; but I am not averse to give as best I can, although I recognize my inability to do justice to the subject, the Democratic side of this controversy in Kentucky. Before undertaking to give a statement of the existing conditions let me briefly reply to my colleague, for whom I entertain a lively regard personally, in regard to some statements that he made. He does not speak for Kentucky, he does not represent her manhood or sentiment, when he claims from his place in this House, "If you will give Kentucky the internal-revenue tax which she pays, you may impose all the tariff or the tax like the one sought to be imposed upon the people of Puerto Rico you like."

There are not, I venture to say, among your constituents 5 per cent who will echo or indorse any such sentiment. The people of Kentucky love the Constitution, and they abhor everything that tends to its violation or disgrace. And if you should give her ten times the revenue which she pays into the National Treasury, she would still protest against the imposition of one centime in violation of the organic law of our country.

Mr. BOREING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BOREING. You observed that I conditioned that on getting rid of the Goebel law. Do you mean to say that 5 per cent would not be in favor of doing that to get rid of the Goebel election law?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not believe any man who understands the election law of his country or faithfully represents the people of Kentucky would be willing to overturn the Federal Constitution to get rid of anything. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOREING. Liberty is better than the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. There is no liberty without the Constitution. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] That is the trouble with the Republican party to-day.

Now, again, sir, I cite a quotation from my colleague's remarks as a fair sample of Republican thought in Kentucky. "I do not think the Goebel law can be authorized by anything but revolution," he said. How can you defend such a statement when the court of appeals have declared the law constitutional? How can you claim to be a law-abiding citizen when you disregard the mandates of the highest courts in your State? The court of appeals, composed alike of Republicans and Democrats, declared the Goebel election law constitutional.

Mr. BOREING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BOREING. Will you state how many were for it—how many voted for it, and how many against it?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am unable to say.

Mr. BOREING. I will ask you if they did not stand 3 to 4, being 3 Republicans against it and 4 Democrats for it?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I can not say. That may be true. The opinion of the court stands, nevertheless, as the construction of that tribunal, and every law-abiding citizen will submit to and obey this opinion of the court; and the man who speaks as a Representative upon the floor of Congress and assails the character of the court of last resort in his State misrepresents, in my opinion, the chivalry of his district, misrepresents the best elements of his people, and does not voice the sentiments of the best element of his State. If the Goebel election law can be justified only by revolution, then your court in that State is a revolutionary body; and to carry his argument to its last equation, the conclusion of the trouble is to be just what suits the Representative from the Eleventh Congressional district or what suits the will of the Republican party.

Now, he speaks of gerrymandering the legislative districts in Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I shall not contend that the dominant party in my State has not taken some advantage of its power. I know of no State in the Union where the party in power has not taken advantage of its power so as to insure the greatest advantage to itself. The reapportionment of the State, perhaps, was not as absolutely fair as a judicial decision should be, but whether it was fair or unfair, how can the House give credence to the statement of a man who questions the fairness of the act of the legislature and in the same hot breath with which he condemns it calls in question the court of last resort of the State?

Sir, if the time has come when we must attack our courts; if the time has come when we must put behind us as untrustworthy every department of the Government, when we must believe that partisanship and corruption pervades every branch of our institutions, then, indeed, have we ceased to be a free people.

Perhaps the legislature that was Democratic, in reapportioning the State, gave what advantage it could to the Democrats of the State. I am not here to question that statement. I believe no intelligent man will deny that such a state of affairs exists in every State of the Union. Perhaps the administration did take that advantage. But whether they did rightly or wrongly, that same court, for whose opinions I have the greatest respect, and for whose opinions, thank God, there are many Kentuckians to-day who, if they do not respect them, tremble at its mandates, have decided that law also constitutional.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one other thing that the gentleman said, and I quote that also as a fair exponent of Republican thought in Kentucky, and appeal quite confidently to the judgment of the impartial Republicans, as well as Democrats, on this floor. He says: "If we can not get rid of the Goebel election law in any other way, I will introduce a bill asking for a Federal election law." Why that threat, Mr. Chairman? If the gentleman wants open-handed fairness, why make the threat that he will ask for a Federal election law? Is it expected that the American Congress will pass anything but a fair election law? If it is a fair one, why threaten us with it? If it is unfair, as the gentleman's argument proclaims that he expects it to be, what other explanation can he offer except that he intends to terrorize the Democrats in Kentucky by the majority that you have in the House?

Mr. BOREING. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption? It was not made as a threat at all. It was made as a statement of fact, that if you did not repeal the law, I would ask for a Federal law.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, I desire to serve notice on my friend now, that that law will never be repealed; and if you come to Congress again, you will come under that law; and as long as you hold a seat here, you will hold it under that law. We will never repeal it. It is there to stay. I will ask the privilege, Mr. Chairman, to incorporate a copy of that law in my remarks, so that the country may see that this law, so much maligned, slandered, and criticised, is practically a copy of the election laws of half a dozen States of this Union to-day.

Mr. BOREING. I have already asked that it go into my remarks.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, I want to put it into mine, and then I know it will be right.

I had in my desk, Mr. Chairman, until a few days ago, a copy of the election laws of the State of Ohio, similar in all respects and identical in many respects to the election laws in Kentucky. It is very similar to the election laws of Virginia. There are half a dozen States in the Union having election laws almost identical with the Kentucky election laws.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me detail briefly the condition of affairs in Kentucky. But before I do that, I must call attention in connection with the gentleman's argument to what he said about the power of the Kentucky legislature. The gentleman is a lawyer, reputed to be a good one, and yet he knows that under the Goebel election law, and under the present constitution of Kentucky, the legislature possesses absolutely no more power than it has had since Kentucky was admitted to the Union as a State. There is not a particle of additional power given to the legislature by the Goebel election law.

Mr. BOREING. I will ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that the legislature elects the election commissioners for the State and these commissioners control absolutely the elections?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is absolutely true.

Mr. BOREING. And that they all belong to one party?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. They do not, but they ought to.

Mr. BOREING. Are not the election commissioners all of one party?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The general commissioners.

Mr. BOREING. And have not they the right to appoint whom they please in the party?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I will explain all that when I reach it.

Mr. BOREING. That is what I meant by the power of the legislature.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, the gentleman was unfortunate in his language. The third constitution of the State gave it no more power than it had by the first or the second. There has been absolutely no change on the subject, and all this fuss and feathers in Kentucky, kicked up by fellows who hold offices to which they were not elected, grows out of the fact that they are unwilling to submit to the action of the legislature and the decrees of the courts of the State.

Now, let us take up this Kentucky situation and look at it a little and the cause of it. The Republican party is not united in Kentucky. The best element of the Republican party is not in control of the party machinery there. There is discord and faction.

Mr. BOREING. How is it with the Democrats?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I will come to the Democrats. I am going to take care of your case before I come to mine.

The best element of the Republican party, I repeat, is not in control of the party machinery in that State; and the present exponents of Republicanism in that State do not represent the best thought of their party. Their last nominee for governor was a concession to the office-holding class of the State. That nomination did not reflect the sentiment of the rank and file of the party—a fact well-known to every Republican in Kentucky. Two most scholarly and accomplished gentlemen who were candidates against him were swept from his path by this office-holding class, and this man was thrust upon the Republicans as their nominee. That created some discord and some trouble.

At the time of his nomination there was no more hope or prospect of electing a Republican governor of Kentucky than there is for my translation. No one expected it. When the Democratic convention met, we had unfortunately our differences, which generated some friction and some discord, because of what? Not because there was any difference among the rank and file of the Democrats of the State, but simply because the great corporation of Kentucky, that had dominated and controlled then, and that dominates and controls now not only the Republican party in Kentucky but the Republican party throughout the United States, had arranged to write our platform and name our candidates. When it came knocking at the doors of the Democratic convention and demanding admission, it was confronted by a modern Goliath who stood in its pathway and said, "Thus far must thou go, and no farther."

And that master spirit of our State, by the force of his genius and indomitable will and persistence of purpose, wrote a platform for the Kentucky Democracy which bid defiance to every special privilege and to corporate greed, and proclaimed allegiance to the rights of the plain people of the State. When this was done the hirelings and clacqueurs and the partisans of this corporation sloughed off from the Democratic party of the State, and carried with them many honest but misguided men. Claiming to be Democrats, they struck hands with the Republicans and made a fight. There was but one battlecry. They dared not assault the platform of the Kentucky Democracy, which I will ask the privilege of incorporating in my remarks.

So, following the tactics of certain lawyers—seeing it was impossible to accomplish the overthrow of the Democracy, if they met us in fair and open battle—they sought to muddy the waters, and they began this assault upon the Goebel election law. They charged fraud in every corner of the State. They forewarned us that there was going to be rascality, trouble, and fraud. Their hired attorneys went up and down the State making this argument, while the Republican representatives could not be found with a searchlight.

Nowhere could you find a Republican speaker on the stand. Nowhere would the Republican leaders meet the Democrats in joint debate. Agents of corporations, all of them claiming to be Democrats, did the campaign work for the Republican party. Not a Republican could you hear of until about ten days before the election, when Governor Bradley, then governor of the State, took "a swing around the circle," as he called it, and spoke in the upper end of the State.

The election came off, and what was the result? In the gentleman's district they gave in 1896 a Republican majority of 15,000. Since that time some counties have been added to that district, giving about 2,000 Republican majority more; so that the Republican majority in 1899 was 17,500. The result was counted and certified, as it was claimed. My own Congressional district—confessedly the strongest Democratic district in the State—which in 1896 gave a Democratic majority of 15,000, gave in 1899 a Democratic majority of only 7,000 and had only 7,000 counted.

Now, if any fraud or rascality was practiced in the Eleventh or the First or any other district of Kentucky under the Goebel law by a single Democrat, and if the gentleman will rise in his place and, on his honor as a man, put his hand upon such a case, I will admit I do not know what I am speaking of. Let the gentleman tell this House, if he can, where there was a single instance of fraud or rascality under the Goebel law. He can not do it. I know he is an honest man and has too much respect for his own honor to say that there was an instance within his knowledge where there was fraud or rascality practiced under the Goebel election law.

Mr. BOREING. What about the trouble in the city of Louisville?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Did the Goebel election law do that?

Mr. BOREING. Was it not done under the Goebel election law?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Can anything be done now in Kentucky that is not done under the Goebel election law? Goebel was assassinated under the Goebel election law. But did the Goebel election law do that?

Mr. BOREING. Was not the board of contest created by the Goebel election law?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Was the man that shot Goebel acting under the Goebel election law?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That was a violation of all law.

Mr. BOREING. Do you mean to ask if that violated the Goebel election law?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Can anything be done in Kentucky that is not done under the Goebel election law as long as it remains on the statute books?

Mr. BOREING. Then is not the Goebel election law responsible for the State commissioners that threw out the vote of Louisville?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. How is it any more responsible for the commissioners that threw out the vote of Louisville than it is for the assassination of Governor Goebel?

Mr. BOREING. The assassination of Goebel was in violation of the law. Then do you admit that the throwing out of the vote of Louisville was also a violation of the law?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not, sir; I will come to that later. But I ask the gentleman to point out some act of fraud that took place under the Goebel election law of which you complain; where some man's vote was properly cast and not properly counted; where some precinct that properly voted was thrown out by reason of the Goebel election law.

Now let us come a little further down. Let us see how the Goebel election law, of which the gentleman complains, works in Kentucky. This is not the first election we have held under that law. We had an election under it in 1898. Under it my colleague [Mr. PUGH], the gentleman who sits by the side of the Representative from the Eleventh district, was a candidate for Congress. He was opposed by a Democrat. It was claimed by the Democrats that the Democrat defeated my friend PUGH by 9 votes. He carried that contest before the election commissioners of the State of Kentucky, three Democrats. The evidence was heard, the argument was made, and they awarded the certificate to Mr. PUGH, the Republican candidate, who now holds his seat on this floor. And that was under the Goebel election law, by three Democrats, where they had the power and where it was with them whether they would act fairly or unfairly. The gentleman forgets——

Mr. LANDIS. Were those the same commissioners that declared Taylor elected governor?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The same commissioners. The commissioners did not declare Taylor elected governor. The legislature alone can act on the gubernatorial question.

Mr. LANDIS. Did they not take that gubernatorial contest before the election commissioners?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. They did not. The gubernatorial contest must be decided by the legislature.

Mr. PUGH. Surely my friend does not want to make that kind of a mistake.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should be glad if the gentleman would correct me.

Mr. PUGH. Do you say that a gubernatorial contest goes primarily before the legislature and not before the State board of election commissioners?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. No; I did not use any such language. You inadvertently put a word in there that I did not use—the word "primarily." I used no such expression as that. All the votes for every office in the State are canvassed by the board of election commissioners.

Mr. LANDIS. That is what I mean to ask.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. But the legislature is, under the constitution, the board of contest, and the legislature alone has the right to pass upon the question of who is or who is not the governor of Kentucky.

Mr. LANDIS. What I meant to ask was this: Was it this same election board that canvassed the returns and declared Mr. Taylor elected governor of Kentucky?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That election commission did not declare Taylor governor of Kentucky. They said that on the face of the returns he had the majority, but that it bore such unmistakable evidence of fraud, that if they had the right they would go behind it and kick him out, as the legislature did.

Mr. PUGH. Did they not issue the certificate to him?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yes; because they were compelled to.

Mr. PUGH. A certificate signed by Judge Pryor and Judge Ellis, two of the members of the board. Did they not issue to him such a certificate?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Why, certainly they did. But does not the gentleman know that in their opinion they said that it bore such unmistakable evidences of fraud that if they had the power to go behind the returns they would refuse him the certificate?

Mr. PUGH. I do know that some of them tried to pave the way for the contest that was afterwards waged on partisan lines in the legislature, to the disgrace of our Commonwealth and to the disgrace of you as a citizen thereof. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is the gentleman's opinion. I would rather be disgraced, Mr. Chairman, at any time by taking my lot with the Democrats of Kentucky than to be identified with the men who took the life of Governor Goebel, of that State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PUGH. Are you quite certain that the men who took the life of Mr. Goebel could not be carried to your own ranks rather than to the Republican party in Kentucky? [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). Nobody believes that.

Mr. PUGH. Do you say nobody believes that?

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). No sane man.

Mr. PUGH. Was not a more bitter personal warfare waged against Mr. Goebel by members of his own party, in the State campaign, than was waged by the Republicans? Was he not denounced more from every stump in the State of Kentucky by Democrats than by Republicans?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is true, Mr. Chairman. [Applause on the Republican side.] It has been the fate of every great man who is true to the interest of the people, to incur the implacable hostility of hirelings and corruptionists, it matters not where he has been. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And some elements of the Democratic party did assail him, but, thank God, he received——

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I will not be interrupted any more.

Mr. PUGH. No, I think not.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Oh, well, if the gentleman will get my time extended, I will be very glad to have him interrupt me all day; but I do not propose to have it taken away when I have not any more time. I say he received 192,000 votes, 30,000 more votes than were ever given to a Democratic candidate for governor in Kentucky before. That shows whether or not he was close to the people of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. PUGH. How many votes did Governor Taylor receive?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is a question that nobody but the Republican leaders and God Almighty will ever know, in my opinion.

Mr. PUGH. As certified by a Democratic board, how many votes did he receive? With the entire election machinery under the control of those opposed to him, did not the findings of the adverse partisan boards, county and State, clearly establish his election by over 2,000 majority?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I have declined to be interrupted. I am not representing the Republican end of this fight. You can take it up after I get through.

Mr. PUGH. Later on I may have occasion to do so. The gentleman knows that I can not claim the time now, as it is already allotted to others. With due regard to the exceedingly unfortunate and perilous state of affairs in Kentucky, I regard this discussion of the situation as inopportune, to say the least, and I am sure that I did not precipitate it. If the gentleman will only state the whole truth——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The gentleman certainly does not mean to insinuate that I state anything else.

Mr. PUGH (continuing). Yes; I do state that when you say that the Kentucky election law is identical with the Ohio election law, that you misrepresent their provisions. The one is by no means identical with the other.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I did not say it was identical.

Mr. PUGH. You said it was similar in many respects and identical in some——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. In many.

Mr. PUGH. In a number of respects. And I say any gentleman who will take that law and compare it with the Ohio election law will see that that is a misstatement.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is your interpretation of the law.

Mr. PUGH. No; not my interpretation. Those laws speak for themselves. One is eminently fair and nonpartisan, and the other was so framed as to subject the expressed will of the people at the polls to party exigencies and partisan purposes. One provides an equal division of election officers, and the other practically gives none.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That may be the gentleman's opinion of the law, but I state my conclusion from reading it.

Mr. PUGH. Is not the Ohio election law nonpartisan in every particular?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is.

Mr. PUGH. And yours is intensely partisan in every respect?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It is partisan.

Mr. PUGH. In the extreme, is it not?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not say so.

Mr. PUGH. How could you make it more so?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Let us get back to the original proposition. I want to understand the gentleman. I stated the proposition to be that the Kentucky election law and the Ohio election law were similar in all respects. I did not mean as to the partisanship——

Mr. PUGH. Why did you not so state.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Let me make my statement. I want to get you to answer me categorically. I say eliminating the partisan question from it, because I admit that the Kentucky election law provides only for Democrats in control, while the Ohio election law provides both parties to be represented.

Mr. BOREING. That is what we complain of.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Eliminating that, I say it is similar in all respects and identical in many. Now, do I understand the gentleman to say that my statement is false in that respect?

Mr. PUGH. If you mean that to be true, I say, speaking advisedly, I will use a milder term—that you grossly misunderstand the facts. I do not say that you intentionally make a misstatement, and I must attribute it to a lack of investigation of the Ohio law. Now I want to ask you a question. Does not the secretary of state of Ohio——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do not want to go into that at all.

Mr. PUGH. You have gone into it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I have a right to go into it.

Mr. PUGH. You ought to go into it more advisedly, then, and not make misrepresentation of these respective election laws.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I want the gentleman to be a little more careful in what he says about this matter. I do not care to have the gentleman offensive in his remarks. I hope it is not so intended.

Mr. PUGH. Surely you do not take it in that way. It is not so intended.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I did not think so. I want to understand the gentleman's attitude, and I am very free to say that I think I understand it. I did not think he meant what he said.

Mr. PUGH. The gentleman knows that it would be far from me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. PUGH. I hope the gentleman may have unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to have more time.

Mr. PUGH. I ask that his time be extended indefinitely.

Mr. McALEER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It will take me more than ten minutes——

Mr. PUGH. Before you go on I want to state this: That you know it would be far from me to misrepresent you or your purposes on this floor.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am quite sure of that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOREING. That is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen will be good enough when interrupting to address the Chair, it will conduce to the orderly conduct of debate.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will proceed now, I trust without interruption, in my statement of the Kentucky situation from my standpoint.

When this campaign had closed in Kentucky, under the provisions of law, the vote in the various counties was certified to a commission composed of three gentlemen, elected by the legislature of the State, whose duty it was to canvass the returns. In the contested-election case of Pugh against Williams the election commissioners had determined that under the law their only authority was to take the certificates from the various county boards, add up the total as certified to them by the county boards, declare the result and issue the certificate in accordance therewith; that they had no revisory power; they had no right to go behind the returns; but in the case of governor and lieutenant-governor the legislature must hear the facts and determine for itself as the constitution provided; and that in the case of the minor officials that this same canvassing board, after issuing certificates, must, after giving due and definite time for preparation, resolve itself into a board of contest, and then, as a new tribunal, hear and determine the rights of the respective claimants to the offices.

The commission issued the certificate to one W. S. Taylor, who was a candidate for the office of governor of Kentucky, and one John Marshall, who was a candidate for the office of lieutenant-governor. Under the certificate which they issued, and in the opinion on which the certificate was based, they plainly said that the footprints of fraud were so apparent that if they had revisory powers they would go behind the returns and refuse to issue the certificates. They likewise issued the certificates to the minor officials.

The Democrats of Kentucky, conscious of the fact that they had won at the polls, resolved to abide by the law as it was written. They served notice at once that they would contest for the office of governor and lieutenant-governor before the legislature, and they would contest before this board of contest for the minor officers of the State. They continued taking their proof and preparing for trial. Matters progressed in accordance with law. There was no thought or idea of disorder or trouble so far as the Democrats were concerned.

This man Goebel, who was the Democratic nominee for governor, was there by his attorneys conducting his contest as best he could, when on a crisp winter morning, on his way to the senate chamber of the State, where he was compelled to go as a member of that body, from the ground floor of the building occupied by the acting governor of the State, and called the executive building, from behind screened and curtained windows, an assassin shot him down like a dog. Who fired that shot, who was responsible for the deed, we only know from the recent confessions of three Republicans who claim to have been active participants in the bloody work.

Immediately after he was assassinated the statehouse building was surrounded by troops. Armed men came from every direction, summoned by the governor of the State, and he held possession, as he holds to-day, of all the buildings of the State departments of Kentucky. The Democrats, though wrought to the highest state of frenzy, under the wise guidance of cool heads determined to keep their place behind the ever-safe ægis of the law.

The legislature, driven by bayonets from its hall of assembly, hustled about the streets of our little capital by the bloody threats of militiamen, refused the right to assemble peaceably for their deliberations, threatened with arrest and extermination, yet bravely persisted in their duty; and while the crimson lifeblood of this gallant young man was fast ebbing away in death, under this glittering sheen of State bayonets they declared that he had been rightfully elected governor of the State and should be inaugurated.

The Republican governor of the State refused to abide by that decision from the only tribunal recognized under our law. It is a matter of history known to us all that appeals were made here to the Executive to induce him to give Federal troops to interfere in Kentucky and that he peremptorily refused to do so. The Democrats remained at their posts inside of the law. They did nothing to incite riot; they did not do anything to incite bloodshed; they have done nothing to incite riot or bloodshed, but have abided the issue calmly and deliberately.

After so long a time an agreement was reached between the representatives of the Republican candidate and the representatives of the Democratic candidate to submit the whole controversy to the courts. The case was made up, the facts were embodied on both sides according to the record, and taken before a judge in Louisville, and that judge, after hearing the evidence and after hearing the arguments, decided that the legislature was supreme and had alone the right to determine who was the governor of the State of Kentucky.

From his decision an appeal was prayed, and the record was taken to the court of last resort. It was presented to them day before yesterday, and on yesterday that court heard the arguments upon both sides, and now they have the question under determination. How they will decide I can not say; but if they decide that Mr. Taylor is governor of Kentucky, no citizen of the State will support him more loyally than myself, as will every Democrat in the State. We stand ready to abide by the decision of that tribunal, whether it be adverse or whether it be favorable.

Now, lay aside the questions of party difference; for upon these questions myself and my friend will never agree. Let us come to the plain question affecting our old State—and he loves it, I have no doubt, as well as I. Is it right or proper that either you or I should stand on the floor of Congress and confess that the judges in Kentucky can be corrupted? It is possible, sir, that judges are endowed with the same frailties and weaknesses that other men possess, but if we are not to turn our eyes with reverence and respect to the courts of our State and our nation, I do not know where we will look for stability and perpetuity of our common country. I do not believe that the people of Kentucky, either Republicans or Democrats, would indorse an attack upon our courts.

Now, I want to say this, in justice to my colleagues on this floor, for whether they agree with me or not, I desire to be fair: I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Republican party of Kentucky is responsible for the assassination of William Goebel. I would be willing to leave the State if I thought so. Some of the best friends I have on earth are Republicans. And, sir, my nearest neighbor in my town, my family physician, the godfather of my boy, is a bitter, uncompromising Republican. He and I could never agree on a question of politics, but I am not so gangrened with political prejudice that I am bound to see something bad in a man that does not agree with me on any question. [Applause.]

Some of Kentucky's most chivalrous and distinguished sons have been Republicans, and they would put behind them with scorn, as would the knightly Democrat in the State, the insinuation that they had stained their hands in the blood of this magnificent young man. I do not charge it on the Republican party. I say there are some Republicans who are responsible, and this same law that we have obeyed and intend to obey in the future, like the poisonous shirt of Nessus, will stick to them until it consumes their very bones or we prosecute them to their conviction.

Now, one word about this man Goebel personally, that the House may have some conception of the man, and I am through with this Kentucky situation. He was not a perfect man. He had many of the faults and weaknesses that most men have. He was not my loved and trusted friend. I fought him for the nomination, but when nominated I supported him loyally as I could. After he was nominated and after he was elected the splendid traits of the man commended themselves to me so strongly that I learned to love him.

Let me give you his death message to an excited and alarmed people, and I will let you say whether or not it was the utterance of a man who had an atom of malice or badness in his heart. When he had been stricken down by the assassin's bullet; when the coverlets of his bed were stained with his heart's best blood; when the clammy sweat of death was on his brow, and when his eyes were glazed for that last long sleep, his friends crowded around him with exclamations of indignation and sorrow, but with feeble voice he said: "Violate no law; be true to the interests of the plain people of the State."

Mr. Chairman, that legacy from that deathbed scene in Frankfort sends the name of William Goebel to posterity in a blaze of glory. No good man, no brave man, in my humble judgment, can question the fairness of a man who can die with such a sentence as that on his lips. Not one single expression during that long week of agony and suspense escaped his lips save of caution or warning, of protest or entreaty, to his loved followers to respect the fair name of our State and to abide the decision of our courts. That is the man. Revile him and slander him, denounce and criticise if you please; he had his faults in his life, but in his taking off he showed the master spirit, the highest touch of patriotism, such gallantry, and such love of country that I would love him, even if I were his political enemy, and forgive all he has done.

Now, sir, we have had conditions in Kentucky, and we have them now. Leave this question to us, gentlemen. We may become inflamed on this floor, but Kentucky, one of the most remarkable States in the Union—said by her historians to be the most conservative body of men the sun ever shone on—will work out her destiny to her own great credit, I am sure. [Applause.] There will be no bloodshed in Kentucky; there will be no partisan unfairness. The fears of my friend will prove groundless, and he will learn before another winter comes that the brave and incorruptible people of Kentucky will not tolerate for an instant anything that is unfair.

If I wished to destroy the Democratic party in Kentucky root and branch, now and forever, I would advocate, as the swiftest and surest mode to accomplish its destruction, for it to take a position such as the gentleman from the Eleventh Congressional district of our State seems to think it has taken.

We are trying to do right. We are going to do right. We believe the Democratic party is right. I believe it. Speaking for myself and, as I believe, voicing the sentiment of every Kentucky Democrat, believing it to be right, I am willing to do everything in my power that is honorable to accomplish its success and destroy its political opponents. To that extent I am willing to go, but not an iota further. I would quit my party without a moment's hesitation if I thought it would miscount a single vote or return it upon the side on which it was not rightfully cast.

I would not hold an office, nor do I believe any Kentucky Democrat would hold an office, that was tainted with suspicion of corruption or fraud. We do not steal elections in Kentucky. There is no occasion for the Democratic party to steal elections in Kentucky. We are the dominant party there, and everybody knows it. The usual Democratic majority in Kentucky is from 50,000 to 60,000. The Goebel election law is fair. We have had two elections under it.

No man has yet risen in his place to say that an unfair thing has been done under it. And, in conclusion, I repeat, it is there to stay; and every man who holds a commission, either State or national, from the State of Kentucky must take it under the mandate of this Goebel election law. We leave it as a permanent and enduring monument to the memory of her knightly son who was so ruthlessly stricken down by a concealed assassin. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KNOX. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to speak of the Kentucky situation, but we have had a remarkable statement made by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. He says they have a law in Kentucky under which only one political party controls the elections, and he proposes that that law shall stand as a monument over the grave of Mr. Goebel. If you have a law like that, under which only one political party controls, that law is a premium upon disorder and crime. No political party ever yet created was good enough to control the entire election machinery of a State. No political organization of men that ever banded together have the right to take to themselves the entire control of the counting machinery and the settlement of elections. It is subversive of republicanism; it is subversive of democracy; it is a violation of every principle upon which free government has been founded, and it is bearing its bloody fruit of assassination, crime, and subornation in the unhappy State in which that terrific crime has been committed.

Mr. GILBERT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman evidently labors under a slight misapprehension. There is not a single word in the Goebel election law about a political party controlling the election machinery.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; of course not.

Mr. GILBERT. It merely gives the selection of the State commissioners to the legislature——

Mr. LACEY. And does not provide that that board shall be divided between the different parties, as every fair election law in the United States does.

Mr. GILBERT. One moment more.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. We never had such a law as that in the history of our State.

Mr. LACEY. Then that was most unfortunate for the State. No wonder it has been a Democratic State so long.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Under the former law the governor, the secretary of state, and the attorney-general were the men who counted the votes.

Mr. LACEY. Let me ask this question: Is it a fair or just arrangement to have an election board composed entirely of representatives of one political party?

Mr. GILBERT. I do not think it is.

Mr. LACEY. Would you be willing to trust three Republicans to run the election business in the State of Kentucky?

Mr. GILBERT. I would not.

Mr. LACEY. And I think I am justified in not being willing to trust the other side under similar circumstances.

Mr. GILBERT. The United States Constitution confers upon the legislature of a State the power to elect United States Senators.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. And the Constitution of the United States does not require that the Senators shall be members of different political parties. A Democratic legislature always elects Democratic Senators——

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. And a Republican legislature always elects Republican Senators?

Mr. LACEY. Not always, but generally.

Mr. GILBERT. Now, we happen to have a Democratic legislature, and they selected three Democrats as election commissioners.

Mr. LACEY. Very well; that is what I object to. I think we understand each other fully.

Mr. GILBERT. One moment.

Mr. LACEY. The law ought not to tolerate such an infamy as that.

Mr. GILBERT. Wait a moment. If the Goebel election law were not in force in Kentucky, there would still be a partisan board.

Mr. LACEY. It should not be so. All parties should be represented on election boards.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman is denouncing a law that is an improvement on the preceding law. If the Goebel law were not in force in Kentucky, a Republican governor, a Republican secretary of state, and a Republican attorney-general would constitute the election board. In other words, we have never had in Kentucky a nonpartisan board to determine election contests.

Mr. LACEY. And that is why you have anarchy there. When you have only one side represented upon the election board, it is natural to go and ask the warden of the penitentiary which man was elected governor. You submitted the question in Kentucky to the warden of the penitentiary to know whether Taylor or Goebel had been elected, and the warden decided in favor of Goebel.

Mr. NEVILLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. LACEY. I do not know what Nebraska has to do with this; but I will yield.

Mr. NEVILLE. What has Iowa to do with it? [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. I will tell you how much Iowa has to do with it.

Mr. NEVILLE. I simply want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not true that the final resort for settling an election is the supreme court of the State or the nation?

Mr. LACEY. They say not in Kentucky. They tell me that the legislature settles it.

Mr. NEVILLE. I asked for your opinion.

Mr. LACEY. I am not a Kentucky lawyer.

Mr. NEVILLE. Is not that true in your State and mine?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. NEVILLE. Why do not you insist that the Supreme Court shall be constituted so as to be nonpartisan? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LACEY. If the Supreme Court held the election, I would insist on its being so. Now, let me ask you, my friend, do you have in the State of Nebraska an election board composed of only one political party? Would you tolerate it in Nebraska?

Mr. NEVILLE. Why, we did for a good many years.

Mr. LACEY. You were opposed to it, were you not? Did you think it was a good thing?

Mr. NEVILLE. I think we have a good election law in Nebraska; but the supreme court of Nebraska finally settles it all, and we do not insist that that shall be nonpartisan.

Mr. LACEY. This question comes up here, being brought into this House by the members representing——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I just want to disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Iowa of a misimpression that I think he has. I think he has an idea that the men who hold the elections in Kentucky are all of one party.

Mr. LACEY. I have an understanding——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What these gentlemen are referring to is the commission of three who act as a canvassing board afterwards. The men holding the election in the counties are as they are elsewhere.

Mr. LACEY. As I understand, from the statement of these gentlemen, that commission of three appoints the various inferior election officers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; but they appoint them from the two parties.

Mr. LACEY. And that is not all. We have the remarkable fact stated here by these gentlemen that the election in Kentucky is being decided and the result changed by throwing out the vote of the great city of Louisville. That city is thrown out of the count altogether, and another man is seated than the one that would be seated if that city were counted. Now, I do not know, I am not attempting to discuss what is actually right in the State of Kentucky, so far as the results are concerned, but a law that permits that——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. A law that allows the election machinery to be in the hands of one political party puts a premium upon crime, and is an invitation to anarchy and bloodshed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I took the floor for entirely different purposes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Just one question.

Mr. LACEY. Very well; I will yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I grant that on the gentleman's statement, as he puts it, it would be a terrible thing, but is it any worse for the State board of canvassers in Kentucky to throw out the city of Louisville and seat Beckham as governor than it is for a Republican majority in the House of Representatives to throw out the vote in the city of Norfolk in order to seat Mr. WISE and throw out Mr. Young? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman simply goes back to the old adage and says, "You're another."

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, are you not? [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. So far as the Norfolk case is concerned, that is not the question we are discussing at this moment. It has been discussed. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] The reason for throwing out the votes in the city of Norfolk in the contest was that the election officers returned that the people voted alphabetically. Adam voted first and Zachariah voted last.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; they were recorded alphabetically. They did not vote alphabetically.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; they voted alphabetically in Norfolk. They voted from the poll list, so the board returned.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And they are recorded alphabetically in Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all; they are recorded as they vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the poll list is alphabetical?

Mr. LACEY. But it is incredible that voters should have gone up to the polls and voted in alphabetical order. Evidently the poll lists were merely copied and the votes fictitious. As I say, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing this question, but I could not help referring to the unfairness of a law that put the control of elections in the hands of a single party, a party that I have great confidence in, the Democratic party; it is a splendid old party; but I would a little rather risk the two parties watching each other in making the count. We always insist of having both sides represented out in Iowa, and I am inclined to think somebody would get hurt in Iowa if only one political party attempted to hold the election and do the counting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I should like five minutes more.

Mr. KNOX. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I rose to call attention to a matter connected with the public-land laws. [Laughter.] I know you all expected that when I rose.

I received a letter the other day from my old friend Mr. Grady, from North Carolina, saying that I was in error in my statement that when we removed General Wheeler's disabilities we removed the last of the political disabilities of the old Confederates. He stated that a Confederate soldier could not take public lands as a homestead to-day. It was a remarkable statement, and I wrote to him to find out where he got it, and he said he wrote to a Populist Congressman and asked him what the law was, and he based his assertion on the statement of the Populist Congressman.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Name him.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Fowler of North Carolina, formerly a member of this House. That reminded me of the measurement between the Plaza and the Dolores Mission in San Francisco. President Lincoln says the surveyors measured it with a "go-it-ometer." The engineers measured it with a contrivance which had to be wound up, and when they got to the Plaza from the Dolores Mission they found that the machine had not been running. So they asked a drayman how far it was, and they put his statement in the field notes, and it is a matter of history to-day that the official distance between the Dolores Mission and the Plaza in San Francisco is based wholly on the word of a drayman. My friend exercised much the same care when he inquired of a North Carolina Populist what the homestead law was.

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama. An ex-Congressman, and a fusionist at that.

Mr. LACEY. Not stopping at that, my friend has put it into a book, and the book is being sent north, east, south, and west. It is called The Case of the South against the North. In that book it is seriously stated that that proviso which was enacted in the homestead law in 1862, when the war was going on, is still in existence.

Mr. NEVILLE. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that that Populist Congressman was from the South, where they have Republican sympathies?

Mr. LACEY. Why, they do not have any great Republican sympathies in the South.

Mr. NEVILLE. I mean that the Populists there have.

Mr. LACEY. This proviso which prevented Confederate soldiers from taking homesteads under the act of May 8, 1862, he says, has never been stricken from the law. I want simply to put into the RECORD the fact, that it may show officially, that that law was repealed less than eight months after the war closed. I will print in connection with my remarks section 2 of the act of June 21, 1866, by which the exception preventing Confederates from taking homesteads was repealed.

Since that time many good old Confederates then, who are good Union men to-day, have taken their homes in the West and in the South, and many of our best and most loyal citizens to-day are men who wore the gray, but who are living upon homes that they obtained under the homestead law of 1862, modified as it was by the act of 1866. When I find that the estimable author of that book has published it broadcast over the South, I think it proper to print in the RECORD the modification of the law, to show that this act does justice to the Confederates, and it was done but a very few months after the surrender of Lee. On the 21st of June, 1866, the prohibition against the taking of homesteads by the Confederates was entirely eliminated from the record. My friend from North Carolina, a genial and pleasant gentleman, with whom I have served in Congress in the past, has made this mistake, no doubt inadvertently, misled as he was by erroneous information, and it is just to him, as well as to Congress, that it should be corrected.

I give now the following extract from The South against the North, by Grady:

But even all these grants, together with others equally violative of the Constitution and the pledge made to the States and to the original grantors or purchasers, were pardonable in comparison with those provided for in the act of May 20, 1862. That donated a homestead free of cost, except a fee amounting to about 11 cents per acre, to any citizen who is the head of a family or who has arrived at the age of 21 years, and to any foreigner who has filed a declaration to become a citizen, provided that he proves his "loyalty."* That is to say, the people of the Southern States who, or whose ancestors, ceded or partly paid for these lands, were excluded from this "bounty of the nation," even the dregs of foreign countries being preferred to them.

The total number of homesteaders up to June 30, 1895 (according to the General Land Office Report for that year, page 91), was 568,936, and the total number of acres patented to them was 67,618,451, the figures for that year being 36,548 original entries and 4,830,915 acres. This was an average annual gratuity of nearly 1,800,000 acres for the whole period after the passage of the act and of nearly three times as much during the last year.

The drain of wealth from the Southern States—particularly those of the original thirteen—by the unwarranted diversion of the public lands from being a source of revenue to the common Treasury of the States, to the enrichment of States, corporations, and individuals in other sections, has resulted in a marked comparative deficiency of the appliances and conveniences of civilization in the original Southern States and to a considerable extent in all of them.

The learned publisher of The South vs. The North should correct his book by an errata slip, and omit so grave an error from all future editions of his book.

The laws to which I have referred are as follows:

CHAP. CXXVII.—An act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act all the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida shall be disposed of according to the stipulations of the homestead law of 20th of May, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and the act supplemental thereto, approved 21st of March, 1864, but with this restriction, that until the expiration of two years from and after the passage of this act, no entry shall be made for more than a half quarter section, or 80 acres; and in lieu of the sum of $10 required to be paid by the second section of said act, there shall be paid the sum of $5 at the time of the issue of each patent; and that the public lands in said States shall be disposed of in no other manner after the passage of this act: Provided, That no distinction or discrimination shall be made in the construction or execution of this act on account of race or color: And provided further, That no mineral lands shall be liable to entry and settlement under its provisions.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That section 2 of the above-cited homestead law, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, be so amended as to read as follows: That the person applying for the benefit of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he or she is about to make such entry, make affidavit before the said register or receiver that he or she is the head of a family, or is 21 years or more of age, or shall have performed service in the Army or Navy of the United States, and that such application is made for his or her exclusive use and benefit, and that said entry is made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person or persons whomsoever; and upon filing the said affidavit with the register or receiver, and on payment of $5, when the entry is of not more than 80 acres, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the amount of land specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if at the expiration of such time, or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or, if he be dead, his widow; or in case of her death, his heirs or devisee; or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of five years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit aforesaid, and shall make affidavit that no part of said land has been alienated, and that he will bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States; then, in such case, he, she, or they, if at that time a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided by law: And provided further, That in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under 21 years of age, the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children for the time being have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose, and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase and be entitled to a patent from the United States on the payment of the office fees and sum of money herein specified: Provided, That until the 1st day of January, 1867, any person applying for the benefit of this act shall, in addition to the oath hereinbefore required, also make oath that he has not borne arms against the United States or given aid and comfort to its enemies.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of the said homestead law, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March 21, 1864, so far as the same may be applicable, except so far as the same are modified by the preceding sections of this act, are applied to and made part of this act as fully as if herein enacted and set forth.

And the same was codified in section 2289, Revised Statutes, 1873:

SEC. 2289. Every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of 21 years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to enter one quarter section or a less quantity of unappropriated public lands, upon which such person may have filed a preemption claim, or which may, at the time the application is made, be subject to preemption at $1.25 per acre; or 80 acres or less of such unappropriated lands, at $2.50 per acre, to be located in a body, in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same have been surveyed. And every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of this section, enter other land lying contiguous to his land, which shall not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres.

Mr. MCALEER. I now yield forty minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, during the past one hundred and

*This proviso has never been stricken out of the law. The only amendment bearing on the qualifications of the beneficiary, so far as the Southern people are concerned, is in the act of 1866, to this effect:

"No distinction or discrimination shall be made in the construction or execution of this act on account of race or color."

twenty-four years the United States has many times extended its boundaries or expanded its territory. First, the Louisiana purchase, in 1803, out of which has been carved the States of Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, a part of Minnesota, a part of Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, a part of Wyoming, Indian Territory, and Oklahoma Territory, and these Territories, together with Arizona and New Mexico, will at some time be admitted as States; next, the Florida purchase from Spain, by treaty, in 1819, first organized as a Territory, and then admitted as a State in 1845, and by the same treaty a large scope of territory, out of which has been carved the States of Oregon, Idaho, and Washington; and third, the annexation of Texas by act of Congress in 1845, followed soon after by other acquisitions from Mexico, under treaty, out of which has been carved the States of California, Colorado in part, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming in part, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico in part. All of these acquisitions were adjoining the territory of the United States, and were secured from a standpoint of national necessity, or in order that we might be rid of dangerous or troublesome neighbors, living in close proximity to us.

France, when in possession of the Louisiana Territory, including the western bank of the river, had control of the mouth of the river, and this was a serious annoyance to American citizens inhabiting the part of the United States on the east side of the Mississippi, and drained by it. This being before the days of railroads, the Mississippi River was the great commercial highway for all the people living within this boundary.

The mouth of the river being in possession of the French, and our right of exit and entrance being secured only by treaty, which could be annulled by France at any time, it was a matter of extreme national necessity that the Louisiana territory should be secured in order that the citizens of the United States living in the eastern part of the valley of the Mississippi might have an unrestricted outlet for their commerce, a dangerous neighbor removed, and our western border secured—a direct application, so to speak, enunciated years afterwards, in what is called the Monroe doctrine, that America should not be considered a field for exploitation and colonization purposes by the powers of Europe.

In the case of Florida, held as it was by impotent and bigoted Spain, its proximity to the southern part of the United States rendered it a fertile field for breeding troubles to our Government.

In the case of the annexation of Texas it was a matter of contract between two intelligent and sovereign nations, advantageous to both.

In the case of the other territory secured from Mexico by treaty, it was but the result of a theory long held by many of our wise and sagacious statesmen that, by the laws of nature and geographically speaking, the entire area from the Atlantic on the east to the Pacific on the west, from the Gulf of Mexico on the south to the Great Lakes on the north, was intended for one great country under one national government.

So, in this way, expansion of our territory was brought about by constitutional methods, and, except in the case of Texas, which was admitted as a sovereign State, always with a view to organizing the lands so secured into Territories with local self-government, and, eventually, to the admission of these Territories into the Union as sovereign States.

This wise and statesmanlike policy has been carried out to such an extent that to-day there are only four Territories, Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory, within the bounds of the above acquisitions.

In 1867 we purchased from Russia Alaska. This purchase, I believe, was not so much because the territory was valuable at the time, or that it was considered that it would ever be of any great use for purposes of emigration and settlement, or from a commercial standpoint, but because, the Russian Government being in the humor to sell, it was thought advisable for the United States to purchase, rather than at some time this territory should fall into the hands of Great Britain, it being held then, as it had long been held, that it would be unwise on our part, from a national standpoint, to permit England to secure any further acquisition of territory in North America.

Mr. Chairman, in all this those in charge of governing and shaping the national policies of the United States were wise and sagacious; the territory acquired being in all instances, practically speaking, an unsettled wilderness and needing only the hand of an intelligent, industrious, and liberty-loving American citizen to be applied in order that it might become an important and valuable part of our great Republic.

National security from external dangers, the perpetuation of our republican form of government, the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of the people of the United States, made it necessary that these acquisitions of territory should be made. This was expansion in its best and truest sense.

Prior to the war with Spain no territory was acquired by the United States outside of North America, nor was any of this acquired except in the furtherance of a policy based on the Monroe doctrine and political necessity.

The Democratic party has always been in favor of this kind of expansion, and except in the case of Alaska, practically speaking, is entitled to the credit for the acquisition of all territory to that time. In all the territories acquired, as I have stated, we have acted in the acquisition of and in governing them strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. I stand with my party on the question of expansion, and in opposition to the policy of imperialism and militarism advocated by the Republicans.

Mr. Chairman, the causes leading to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands are not in all respects the same as those leading to all former acquisitions. Along this line it may not be out of place to mention some facts in connection with the acquisition of these islands and their history. They were discovered by Captain Cook in 1789, and at that time were populated by a warlike, vigorous, and hearty race. They were a higher type of what may be termed "barbarous Asiatics." The islands are situated in the Pacific Ocean, some 2,000 miles from the coast of North America and about 4,000 from the coast of Asia.

The people of the islands were almost entirely isolated from the outside world up to the time of their discovery by Cook. The population then numbered between four and five hundred thousand. The area of the islands being only in the neighborhood of 6,000 square miles, this would give a per capita population of upward of 75 to the square mile. Since 1789, when the islands were discovered, to 1819, the islands were greatly reduced in population by the ravages of war and disease. Since then the death rate of the Hawaiians has increased to such an extent that to-day there are only about 40,000 natives and Hapas, or half-castes.

Prior to 1819, idolatry was a part of the religious practice of the Hawaiians.

May 8, 1819, Kamehameha I (then King of all the islands) died. By his will he left to his son, Liholiho, the sovereignty of all the islands, with the title of King Kamehameha II, and appointed Kaahumanu (his widow) premier, to exercise equal authority with the young king. These two almost immediately abolished idolatry and destroyed the infamous Tabu system, so that when the pioneer missionaries arrived at the islands, October 23, 1819, they found these people self-redeemed from idolatry and casting aside the superstitions of their fathers.

When the Christian missionaries from New England landed in the island, they were most kindly received by the natives. The people of the islands having some knowledge of western civilization from the occasional visits of passing ships, willingly received the teachings of the missionaries, and in a short while the greater part of them were converted to Christianity; and the Christian religion being the foundation stone of all lasting and progressive civilization, the Hawaiians have from that day to this made rapid progress. Up to 1820 they had no written language other than crude hieroglyphics, amounting to very little in the way of education from a practical standpoint, being symbolic only.

Until January 17, 1893, the islands continued under a monarchy which had existed from time immemorial. During this period of time, from 1819, when idolatry was abolished, to 1893, when the monarchy was abolished, education became general throughout the islands and Christianity common among all the people.

In 1893 a part of the foreign population, dominated and led by Americans or people of American extraction, successfully rebelled and overthrew the existing government, deposed Queen Liliuokalani, abolished the monarchy, and set up a republican form of government, modeled for the most part after that of the United States; and, with the government securely in their own hands, they promulgated a constitution for the islands, containing, amongst other things, a provision looking forward to and providing for annexation to the United States whenever it could be effected. This government continued until the 7th of July, 1898, when the Hawaiian Islands, by a joint resolution passed by Congress, were annexed to the United States.

The causes leading up to annexation were, first, the islands being of prominence on account of their situation in the Pacific Ocean, on the usual route of travel between Asia and North and South America, and on account of agricultural and trade resources; and, second, its government being weak from a standpoint of force and ability to maintain itself against a strong and aggressive power. The governing power of Hawaii earnestly desired annexation by the United States as a security for their welfare for all time to come.

When war was declared by the United States against Spain, in 1898, and after Dewey had sunk the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila, the United States was under the necessity of transporting to the Philippine Islands ships, soldiers, and supplies. As a matter of convenience, and sometimes of necessity, our ships and vessels of war had occasion to stop at the ports of Hawaii for coal and other supplies.

The Hawaiian government treated the United States in all these matters with the utmost consideration and as if there were existing between the two countries a treaty of alliance, amity, and friendship, offensive and defensive, demanding that the Hawaiian government should place at the disposal of the United States her ports to be used in time of war in the same manner that she would use her own, thus clearly violating the principle of international law requiring friendly nations to preserve strict neutrality between belligerents. This course of procedure on the part of the Hawaiian government had Spain been victorious in the war would undoubtedly have brought upon her serious consequences.

Not waiting for any of these contingencies and possible troubles, the Hawaiian government, being most anxious for annexation to the United States, in due form signified its consent, in the manner provided by its constitution, to cede absolutely and without reservation to the United States of America all rights of sovereignty of whatsoever kind in and over the Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies, and also to cede and transfer to the United States absolute fee and ownership of all public property, etc.

The United States, on July 7, 1898, during the continuance of the war with Spain, passed a joint resolution for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and amongst other things in the resolution of annexation, which is nothing more or less than a contract between the people of Hawaii and the United States, it is provided that—

Until legislation shall be enacted extending the United States custom laws and regulations, existing customs relations of the Hawaiian Islands with the United States and other countries shall remain unchanged.

Leaving to the Congress of the United States final action in the premises.

The following statements in reference to the Hawaiian Islands in geographical, historical, and educational matters are taken from a handbook of information issued by the Hawaiian government in 1899:

GEOGRAPHICAL.

They are not in the "South Seas," the Hawaiian Islands are not, though often placed there erroneously. The group proper is situated between 18° 54′ and 22° 15′ north latitude and 154° 50′ and 160° 30′ west longitude. Therefore the islands must be in the North Pacific Ocean. If there be any further difficulty about finding the Hawaiian Islands, just steer due west from Mexico and stop when you see the Stars and Stripes flying over dry land. That will be they.

The islands of any account number eight, in order of size being Hawaii, Maui, Oahu, Kauai, Molokai, Lanai, Niihau, and Kahoolawe. Kauai is the most northern and Hawaii the most southern. Draw a line northwestwardly from the farthest south point of Hawaii to the farthest north point of Kauai and you leave all the other islands north of it excepting little Niihau, close westward of Kauai, and a vessel following the same course would hug Honolulu so closely that she might as well come in for water and news.

Beyond the boundaries given in the foregoing there are nine or ten uninhabited islets—mere rocks and reefs—extending in an irregular chain west and northwest, over which, severally, jurisdiction has been taken by different Hawaiian governments. Some of these specks are known for their guano deposits, others as shark-fishing grounds, but too many of them for their sad record of shipwreck. The five islands of the group proper, already named—Hawaii, Maui, Oahu, Kauai, and Molokai—are the only ones considerably populated.

Hawaii, the largest island, gives its name, in accepted parlance, to the whole country and its government. It is 90 miles long from north to south, and 74 miles broad from east to west. The area is 4,210 square miles. Topographically the island is bold and majestic in feature, being an aggregation of vast volcanic mountains. Three sublime domes are visible at once from various points of view, and their bases conjoining entitle them to the name they sometimes receive, "The Triplets."

Mauna Kea is 13,805 feet in height. It is the highest mountain in the group. Mauna Loa is distinguished for containing all the living volcanoes in the islands. Indeeed, the occasionally active crater of Mokuaweoweo forms its summit, the elevation of the loftiest point of its rim being 13,675 feet. The crater of Kilauea—never failing in strong manifestations of fire and often furiously active—is hollowed into the side of the mountain at an elevation of 4,000 feet.

Hualalai, third of the trio, is 8,275 feet high. Hail and snow are frequent at and above 9,000 feet elevation, and the summits of Mauna Kea and Mauna Loa glisten like diamonds with caps of snow a great portion of the year. In the extreme north of the island rise the Kohala Mountains, the highest peak being 5,505 feet. The coast line is regular, bays are few, and natural harbors entirely wanting. Hilo Bay, on the east, contains an eligible site for harbor works, which it is confidently expected the United States Government will not long delay supplying. As it is, the port is constantly frequented by shipping, having tolerably safe anchorage and a small wharf newly constructed.

Other bays are Kealakekua and Kailua, on the west, and Kawaihae, on the northwest. Landings are established at more than a score of places for the coasting traffic. Hawaii leads the other islands in production. It has many large sugar plantations, by far the greater portion of the coffee-raising industry, and a number of extensive stock ranches. With the regular steam communication, at this moment having good promise of being permanently established with the Pacific coast, the island of Hawaii will figure proportionately large in fruit cultivation. There is good soil at such a variety of altitude that the products of temperate climates can be successfully cultivated within the very sight of tropical vegetation.

Maui, the second island in size, has an area of 760 square miles, the greatest length being 48 miles and breadth 30 miles. It is composed of two mountainous formations of unequal size. The smaller part is a cluster of serrated ridges, the loftiest peak having a height of 5,800 feet. Deep and fertile valleys between these spurs produce a variety of tropical fruits without cultivation. Steep precipices overlook the ocean on the north, while on the southwest and northeast coasts there are sugar plantations and pasture lands. Iao Valley, extending westward from the town of Wailuku, is one of the most beautiful valleys in the islands.

The larger portion of the island, having the appearance of a body supporting the portion just described as a head, contains the vast dome of Haleakala. This is 10,030 feet high and has the distinction of being the largest extinct volcano in the world. Its base is surrounded with sugar plantations, and upon its slopes temperate and tropical agriculture blend into each other. Maalaea Bay, in the south of a low neck of land joining the two sections of the island already mentioned, contains landing places, but is too exposed to the sea for a shipping resort. Kahului Bay, in the north of the same neck, has good anchorage in its inner part, and has direct trade, by sailing vessels, with the Pacific coast. Hana is a small harbor.

Oahu, although third in size, holds the highest rank from its containing the capital city, Honolulu, and having much more than one-third of the population of the group. According to its size it is also the greatest producer, while it is far and away the leader in manufactures, leaving out sugar milling. Oahu has an area of about 600 square miles. It has a length of 46 miles and a breadth of 25 miles, but, being irregular in shape, the average breadth of its eastern half is probably less than half of the latter figure. Oahu is as mountainous as any of the islands.

The Koolau Range extends from the extreme eastern point to the northwestern coast, a distance of about 35 miles, and for half that length its transverse ridges run nearly from sea to sea. The Waianae Range, in the southwest, runs about 20 miles and has on that side lofty spurs extending to the coast. These are the principal elevations: Lanihuli Peak, in the Koolau Range, 2,780 feet; Konahuanui, same, 3,105 feet; Palikea Peak, Waianae Range, 3,110 feet; Kaala, same, 4,030 feet; Pali, 1,307 feet; Tantalus, 2,013 feet; Koko Head, 1,205 feet.

Honolulu Harbor is the only properly improved harbor in the islands. It admits to dock the largest steamships that ply the North Pacific. Pearl and Koolau harbors, on the south and north, respectively, are capable of being made, at moderate expense, among the finest havens for deep-sea shipping in the world. Kalihi Harbor is available to be connected by an inexpensive channel, inside the line of breakers, with and made an annex of Honolulu Harbor. There are several other lagoons on the island which admit small coasting vessels, although their entrances are more or less dangerous.

Kauai has an area of 590 square miles. Its length is 25 miles and breadth 22 miles. It is the oldest, in geological formation, of the group. Waialeale is a large mountain mass in its center, the lower parts of which slope easily toward the sea. Kauai is better supplied with streams than any of the other islands. It is called the "Garden Isle," from its very general fertility. Sugar plantations are upon every side, besides which the cultivation of rice is extensive. The northwestern part of the island is very precipitous, forming a line of lofty cliffs for 7 miles. There are several bays and inlets, but no secure haven.

Niihau is a very interesting little island. Its entire land, comprising 70,000 acres, or 97 square miles, belongs to one firm and is almost wholly devoted to sheep raising. It has a mountain range attaining an elevation of 800 feet, and much cut into by ravines. Feathered game abounds on Niihau. The whole island would make a magnificent health and pleasure resort.

Civilization was introduced to the Hawaiian Islands by Captain Cook's discovery in 1778. It is believed that the group was inhabited as early as A. D. 500. The aboriginal people are supposed to belong to the same race as the tribes of Samoa, Fiji, and Tahiti. Their language is much like the languages of those groups, and it is certain that there was much intercourse, in canoes navigated by the aid of the stars, between the southern archipelagoes named and Hawaii during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The ancient Hawaiians were barbarians rather than savages. They never were cannibals. Up to the time of Kamehameha's subjugation of all the islands, at the dawn of the nineteenth century, feudal government prevailed and wars, not only between islands, but between districts, were almost constantly being waged.

The islands were discovered by foreigners several times. A Japanese junk drifted into Kahului Bay in the thirteenth century, and its crew stayed and intermarried with the natives. In the first quarter of the sixteenth century, a Spanish vessel, belonging to an expedition sent out by Cortez from Mexico, for a farther destination, was wrecked on Hawaii and the captain and his sister, the only survivors, were received as welcome acquisitions to Hawaiian society. They intermarried with natives and their descendants were high chiefs. The islands were discovered again by the Spanish navigator, Juan Gaetano, but nothing came of the event, except getting the group placed 10° too far east on charts.

Soon after Cook, the benevolent Vancouver paid three visits to Hawaii. This was just as Kamehameha was beginning the game of conqueror. Vancouver, besides presenting the ruling chiefs with useful plants, cattle, and sheep, had a vessel built for Kamehameha and gave him excellent advice. He also told him that the heathen tabus were all wrong, and that there was but one living and true God. There were persons of high rank about the king who laid the bluff commander's words up in their hearts.

Kamehameha died in 1819 without having renounced his gods, but immediately the two queens, Keopuolani and Kaahumanu, deliberately broke the tabus—which had always been enforced with the penalty of death—and priests and people made bonfires of the idols. When, early the following year, the first band of American missionaries arrived, they found the fences of idolatry leveled to the ground.

The Kamehameha dynasty ended with the death of Kamehameha V in 1872. As he died without appointing a successor, the legislature elected Prince William C. Lunalilo king. The government had for some time been a constitutional monarchy. Lunalilo died after a reign of a little more than a year, and, he also failing to name a successor, the legislature elected David Kalakaua. The reign of Kalakaua was marked by two notable events, the making of a treaty of reciprocity with the United States and the coercion of the king, by an armed demonstration of foreign residents, to promulgate a new constitution, materially limiting the prerogatives of the sovereign.

Kalakaua named his sister, Princess Liliuokalani, as his successor. He reigned nearly seventeen years, and died at San Francisco on January 20, 1891. In his absence Liliuokalani was regent, and at his death she became queen. Upon attempting to promulgate a new constitution of her own authority on January 14, 1893, she was confronted by a revolution that culminated three days later in the abrogation of the monarchy. A provisional government was placed in control of affairs until annexation to the United States could be obtained; but as that consummation seemed to be long in coming, a constitutional convention prepared the way for the proclamation of the republic of Hawaii on July 4, 1894.

By a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States passed on July 7, 1898, the Hawaiian Islands came under the sovereignty of the United States of America. The formal transfer of sovereignty took place on August 12, 1898, and a commission, appointed by President McKinley, has, doubtlessly, before this book has been issued, recommended to the Congress a form of government for Hawaii under the Star and Stripes.

By the census of 1896, the population of the Hawaiian Islands was 109,020, subdivided by nationalities as follows:

Nationality.	Male.	Female.	Total.
Hawaiian	16,389	14,630	31,019
Part Hawaiian	4,249	4,236	8,485
Born of foreign parents	7,058	6,675	13,733
Foreign born, all kinds	44,811	10,972	55,783
Grand total	72,517	36,503	109,020

Below is an analysis of nationalities, counting all of Hawaiian blood together, also adding into one lot the foreigners of each nationality born in and out of the islands:

Race.	Male.	Female.	Total.
Native Hawaiian	20,648	18,856	39,504
American	1,975	1,111	3,086
British	1,406	844	2,250
German	866	566	1,432
French	56	45	101
Norwegian	216	162	378
Portuguese	8,202	6,989	15,191
Japanese	19,212	5,195	24,407
Chinese	19,167	2,449	21,616
South Sea Islanders	321	134	455
Other nationalities	448	152	600
Grand total	72,517	36,503	109,020

The population, by the census of 1890, was 89,990. By islands, the population in 1836 was as follows:

Island.	Male.	Female.	Total.
Oahu	26,164	14,041	40,205
Hawaii	22,632	10,653	33,285
Maui	11,435	6,291	17,726
Kauai	10,824	4,404	15,228
Molokai	1,335	972	2,307
Lanai	51	54	105

The preponderance of males over females in the population of the Hawaiian Islands, by nearly two to one, is accounted for by the large immigration of male laborers for work on the sugar and rice plantations.

EDUCATIONAL.

Hawaii has a thoroughly organized school system. By an act of the legislature of 1896 its administration was elevated in rank from that of a bureau, without representation in the executive, to that of a department of the government, with a cabinet minister as its official head. By that enactment the minister of foreign affairs became also minister of public instruction and president ex-officio of a board of six commissioners of education. It is provided that two of the commissioners may be ladies, and two ladies are, at present, members of the board.

Schools were first established in the Hawaiian Islands by the American pioneer missionaries. Though dead, they have left records that speak. E. W. Clark was one of the instructors of the Lahainaluna Seminary, and he wrote an article upon that institution in the Hawaiian Spectator of October, 1838. This was a quarterly magazine "conducted by an association of gentlemen," as appears from its title page, and printed for the proprietors by Edwin O. Hall, the mission printer at Honolulu. Mr. Clark wrote:

"When the Sandwich Islands Mission commenced its operations in 1820 nothing like education was known at the islands. The vernacular tongue had not even been reduced to a written language."

Compare the condition thus stated with that described by a writer in the North American Review for July 1897—seventy-seven years later—of the status at that time: "For many years in the past it was rare to find a native Hawaiian who could not read and write his native language. There is a change now, but without retrogression. It consists of a rapid advance toward an equally universal command of English by the native people."

Mr. Clark, in his writing of sixty years ago, went on to tell of the course pursued by the missionaries to remedy the condition of gross darkness covering this people:

"To reduce the language, as they found it in the mouths of the people, to a written form was their first object. A few elementary school books were then prepared, and the business of education commenced. * * * Soon multitudes were able to read and write (imperfectly, it is true) their own language. Schools were established throughout the islands, and supplied with such teachers as could be obtained." The instructor of Lahainaluna tells of the difficulties obstructing progress in the educational work, such as "the pressing engagements of the members of the mission in preaching, translating, and other labors," and goes on to tell of the birth of Lahainaluna Seminary, thus:

"In this state of things, it was unanimously resolved, at a general meeting of the mission in June, 1831, to form a high school for raising up school-teachers and other helpers in the missionary work." The design of the high school, later called the Mission Seminary, was quoted from its printed laws by Mr. Clark. It was in part "to disseminate sound knowledge throughout the islands, embracing general literature and the sciences and whatever may tend to elevate the whole mass of the people from their present ignorance and degradation, and cause them to become a thinking, enlightened, and virtuous people."

In September, 1831, the school went into operation at Lahainaluna, island of Maui, under the care of Lorrin Andrews as principal. Mr. Andrews was the maternal grandfather and patronymic of Hon. Lorrin Andrews Thurston, lately Hawaiian minister to Washington. Lahainaluna is now an institution of the public school system of Hawaii. It occupies a commanding situation, overlooking the village of Lahaina and the Pacific. Industrial training is one of its strong features.

Mr. Clark, telling of its earliest days, mentions that "a printing press was established in connection with the school, and placed under the charge of Mr. E. H. Rogers as printer." It is interesting, therefore, to note that to-day an educational monthly paper, The Progressive Educator, is printed and published at Lahainaluna—the pupils doing the mechanical work—under the auspices of the department of public instruction, which has recently provided a modern printing plant for the institution.

So much space is given to Lahainaluna, not only because it is the oldest superior school in the system as it now stands, but because it is one of several high schools in the islands where industrial education is made prominent. With this statement, the others of the class need not be separately mentioned. The discovery of the old missionary quarterly quoted in the foregoing, which happened in turning over a heap of musty tomes in the foreign office, enables another remarkable comparison to be made between the schools of those days and of the present. Edwin O. Hall has an article in the same number of The Spectator on "Common Schools of the Sandwich Islands," in which he gives the number then, the year 1838, under instruction as at least 15,000 children.

He remarks that some of the reports did not give numbers, and that probably 18,000 would come nearer the truth. The figures he gives, by islands, total up 15,313, which is singular as being about 800 more than the number of pupils officially reported in all schools of the islands for 1897, viz, 14,522, but "probably 18,000 would come nearer the truth" for the latter part of 1898, judging from the fact of a constantly increasing condition of schoolhouse overcrowding. Here is a comparison of school attendance in 1838 and 1897, by islands:

Maui, 2,743, and Lanai, 149	2,892	3,488
Molokai	1,061	157
Kauai and Niihau	1,933	1,621
Total	15,313	14,522

In 1838 Maui and Lanai are given separately, whereas they are coupled in 1897, and Niihau is not mentioned in 1838. This comparative statement shows a great falling off since two generations in the number of children attending school on the islands other than Oahu, with a proportionate increase on that island, owing to its containing the capital city, Honolulu. In another country such a condition might be taken, offhandedly, as an illustration of the process of the country losing to the town.

It is something more than that here. They were, virtually, all native Hawaiian children, those attending school in 1838. The total number of Hawaiian and part Hawaiian children enrolled as pupils in 1897, for the whole group, was 7,849, or but a few hundred more than the school attendance on the island of Hawaii alone in 1838. So the situation simply reveals one phase of the diminution of the Hawaiian race, a fact that has been much deplored but which is not for discussion in this connection.

The comparison just instituted naturally leads to an inquiry as to the composition of our schools by nationalities. What a conglomerate and polyglot mass of young humanity the teachers of Hawaii are expected to ground in the elements of intelligence and good citizenship is exhibited in this official table of school attendance in 1897:

Nationality.	Number of pupils.	Nationality.	Number of pupils.
Hawaiian	5,330	Scandinavian	106
Part Hawaiian	2,479	French	2
American	484	Japanese	590
British	280	Chinese	1,078
German	362	South Sea Islanders	10
Portuguese	3,815	Other foreigners	76

Attendance was divided between public and private schools thus:

	Male.	Female.	Total.
Public schools	5,925	4,643	10,568
Private schools	2,092	1,862	3,954

There were 132 public and 60 private schools in 1897. One of the public schools on the little island of Niihau was the last survivor of schools taught in the Hawaiian language. The number of pupils under 6 years of age, in all schools, was 805; between 6 and 15, 12,466, and over 15, 1,161. Sexes were fairly well balanced in numbers, excepting in the case of Chinese, who had 773 boys to 305 girls in school. Deducting their excess of boys from the total excess, there will be only an excess of 44 boys to be divided among all other nationalities.

The teaching force in all Hawaiian schools for 1897 was composed of nationalities as follows: Hawaiian, 57; part Hawaiian, 62; American, 253; British, 69; German, 12; French, 6; Scandinavian, 6; Portuguese, 20; Japanese, 3; Chinese, 13; other foreigners, 6. There were 123 male and 175 female teachers in the public, and 82 male and 127 female teachers in the private schools, a grand total of 507, or an average of 28.64 pupils for each teacher. In this connection, especially in view of the object of this book, a circular letter prepared by Mr. H. S. Townsend, inspector-general of schools, for replying to many inquiries from abroad is here quoted:

"There is but one system of public schools in Hawaii. One board employs all teachers. Permanency being an important consideration, candidates are favored who are, or who are expected to become, permanent residents of Hawaii. All schools are in session ten months of each year, and all teachers are engaged by the year. In consequence there are few vacancies in the teaching force to be filled after the 1st of September.

There is no great educational reorganization in progress in the islands, though there is educational progress and development. Our public-school system is older than those of most of the States, and the teaching force is more permanent. There is no scarcity of teachers, though there is difficulty in finding suitable teachers for some of the less desirable positions in the country districts, owing to the lack of suitable boarding places.

Cottages are sometimes furnished teachers so that they may be able to board themselves. There are 238 teachers in the public schools, 134 of these being classified as Americans; but the majority of those so classified are of island birth. The average annual salaries of men are $745.50; of women, $551.80; of all teachers, $631.80. Qualifications required here are similar to those required in those States having school systems of the better sort, though not quite so high as the requirements in California. The standard is, however, gradually rising.

"It is a waste of time and patience to send in applications from abroad. With these facts in view, those desiring to join the teaching force here should decide for themselves whether the prospects will justify the risks of the journey and the venture."

Education is compulsory as to schools in general, and, with an exception herein noted, free as to the public schools. The law requires that every child from 5 to 15 years of age, inclusive, shall attend either a public or private school taught in English.

Special police, called "truant officers," are appointed in every district, to enforce the compulsory-attendance clause. English education in Hawaii gradually grew upon the Hawaiian stalk first planted by the missionaries, as already seen. When schools were first started as state institutions, they were taught in the Hawaiian language. English was introduced as the foreign population increased. When, in the course of time, the better classes of Hawaiians manifested a desire for English instruction, English schools were instituted in localities upon the request of a certain number of residents.

Thus the large school in Honolulu, still called the "Royal School" and flourishing as part of the public system, was established and given its name to become the place where the scions of royalty and chiefly rank were to be educated. King Kalakaua and Queen Liliuokalani attended this school. English was early taught as a classic in the large mission schools. It was recognized as the vernacular in 1876 at Lahainaluna Seminary, afterwards becoming there the dominant medium of instruction.

Gradually the transformation went on until 1896, when teaching in this language became obligatory in all schools. American text-books are employed almost exclusively in the public schools, those for the higher grades including the cream of English classics. The only exceptions to the rule are Hawaiian geography and history.

Select schools, where tuition fees are charged, are permitted in the state system, and, as a matter of fact, exist in a group centering in the Honolulu High School. This is under a section of the law which provides "that the department may, in its discretion, establish, maintain, and discontinue select schools, taught in the English language, at a charge of such tuition fees for attendance as it may deem proper: Provided, however, That such select schools shall be established only in places where free schools of the same grade for pupils within the compulsory age are readily accessible to the children of such district."

The Honolulu High School is organized in three departments of English, mathematics, and natural science. Good work is also done in foreign languages.

Under the constitution of the republic of Hawaii, aid from the public treasury to sectarian schools was prohibited. Formerly it was the regular practice of successive legislatures to pass grants of money to schools under the control of different denominations. Instead of becoming weaker from the withdrawal of public aid, the independent schools in 1896 exhibited an increase of attendance proportionate to that of the public schools.

There are several noble institutions, under both Protestant and Catholic auspices, established in the islands. Oahu College, at Honolulu, a foundation of the American mission, has a handsome group of public buildings. It has chairs in the ancient and modern languages and natural philosophy, besides the usual academic branches. St. Louis College, also at Honolulu, is conducted by Roman Catholic brothers, giving instruction from primary to classical grades, with music and drawing as specialties. It is exclusively for boys and has the longest roll of all the schools in the islands. Iolani College, owned and directed by the Anglican bishop of Honolulu, with an able staff of instructors, does substantial work.

There are schools for girls, giving industrial as well as scholastic instruction, conducted by the successors of the American mission, the Anglican, and the Catholic sisters, respectively, not only in Honolulu but in country towns. The Kamehameha schools, for native boys and girls, were founded by the will of the late Mrs. Charles R. Bishop, a Hawaiian princess eligible for the crown, but refusing nomination therefor. These, besides giving tuition from primary to high school grades, inclusive, afford the benefits of manual training in various branches of mechanical and domestic industry.

For many years past the greater part of the trade of the islands has been with the United States. In 1897 the exports to the United States amounted to $15,311,685; in 1898, $16,587,311, and in 1899, $22,188,206. During these and many previous years the balance of trade has been largely in favor of the Hawaiian Islands.

In 1897 we exported to the Hawaiian Islands $5,478,224; in 1898, $6,827,848, and in 1899, $11,305,587. The trade of the islands during these years with nations other than the United States has been very small, and it is a remarkable showing of the fertility and capabilities of the islands from an agricultural standpoint. The average in their favor for each of the three years amounting to nearly $10,000,000. The trade of the islands, amounting now to more than $33,000,000 annually, will probably within the next decade amount to $60,000,000 or $70,000,000; and I do not know of any reason why, when the agricultural resources of the island are fully developed, we may not count on a trade of $100,000,000 annually.

It must not be concluded, however, that the Hawaiian people reap all the advantages of this enormous and greatly increasing trade. As a matter of fact, the bulk of the valuable sugar, coffee, and rice lands in cultivation are owned and controlled by great corporations, and very few Hawaiians are interested in these corporations. Some of the great sugar plantations make enormous profits. One of them, it is said, on a capital of more than $2,000,000, in one year made a profit of about 80 per cent. Nor is it true that all of the stockholders in these great and money-making corporations are residents of the islands. Numbers of them reside elsewhere; consequently the blighting effects of absentee landlordism, so much complained of in Ireland, are in evidence to some extent in the Hawaiian Islands. In other words, the islands have been developed largely through the efforts of speculators and capitalists, and one result of this has been to place the bulk of the rich sugar, coffee, and rice producing lands in cultivation in the hands of persons other than the native Hawaiians.

The statement has been made that the average native Hawaiian owns between 2 and 3 acres of land and the corporations and persons other than Chinese and Japanese own, on an average, 400 acres each. These figures, if true, show to some extent how the lands have passed into the hands of persons other than the natives.

The citizens of Hawaii are, as a rule, educated. My information is that of male citizens, 21 years of age and upward, more than 95 per cent can read and write the English or Hawaiian languages. This high degree of intelligence in educational attainments has been brought about by eighty years of persistent effort by the government in educational matters.

It must not be supposed, however, that in Hawaii where among the citizens education and intelligence is and for many years past has been the rule, and where illiteracy is the exception, that since the overthrow of the monarchy any considerable number of citizens have participated in the elections, as the following statement, taken from the official records, shows:

In the last election under the monarchy, in February, 1892, the total vote was 14,217; of these 9,931 were Hawaiians. This is about the usual proportion of one voter in five of population. After the overthrow of the monarchy in 1893, the first election was for a constitutional convention under the Republic, May, 1894.

The total vote cast was 3,852; of these, 939 were Hawaiians; and in the next general election, held September, 1897, the total vote cast was 2,693; of these, 1,126 were Hawaiians, and this, too, with a population of 110,000. I wish to call the attention of my Republican friends to the fact that in the Hawaiian Islands, as in the South, the government is in the hands of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Wherever this race has gone they have demonstrated that they are the superior race, and when it comes to matters of government they are stronger and more vigorous than other races, and rule accordingly.

The bill before the House provides a strictly republican form of government for the Territory of Hawaii under the letter as well as the spirit of the Constitution of the United States. We give to them local self-government in unequivocal terms, and to the general assembly of the Territory power is given to enact all local legislation necessary not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

We place in the hands of the citizens of the Territory, by this bill, the means of redressing any local grievances that may now or hereafter exist. The Committee on Territories, having in charge the bill, have endeavored to follow and improve upon all bills heretofore passed by the Congress of the United States for the government of Territories, and to give to the Hawaiian Islands most liberal form of government, strictly in accordance with the letter and under the limitations of the Constitution of the United States.

Whatever criticism may be made upon the action of the committee in other respects, it can not be charged that the members were wanting in liberality in providing for the future government of the Hawaiian Islands; nor can it be said that by the provisions of the bill the Hawaiians are denied any rights, privileges, or immunities guaranteed by the Constitution to any citizen of the United States.

The people of the Hawaiian Islands understand that annexation means that the islands shall become a part of our territory and be governed under our Constitution as all other Territories of the United States have in the past been governed; and along the line of carrying out this contract between the people of Hawaii and the United States, the President, in his message to Congress in December last, states that "the people of these islands are entitled to the benefits and privileges of our Constitution."

The bill declares all persons who were citizens of the republic of Hawaii on August 12, 1898, to be citizens of the United States, and that the Constitution and the laws of the United States, locally applicable, shall have the same force and effect there as elsewhere in the United States. The right to vote is extended to all male citizens residing in the Territory for one year and in the district in which they register not less than three months, who shall register, pay a poll tax of $1, and be able to read and write the English or Hawaiian language. These provisions as to suffrage are largely modeled after the constitution and laws of many of the most progressive States of the Union, among others those of Massachusetts and South Carolina.

The committee deemed it wise to strike out the provisions in the original bill requiring voters for certain offices to be possessed of property of the value of $1,000 or have an annual income of not less than $600, because it is not believed that the same are necessary to secure good government in the Territory, and because such provisions are contrary to the spirit of a republican form of government, and, if permitted and practiced, would inevitably place the government of the Territory in the hands of a moneyed oligarchy, and in effect would amount to placing dangerous power in the hands of men who happen to be possessed of wealth, and, politically speaking, would tend to make a serf of a man possessed of the highest mental and moral attainments, should he happen not to be the owner of $1,000 worth of property or have an income of $600 a year.

To my mind it is not conceivable that the Hawaiian people could be secure in their rights under the Constitution of the United States and continue prosperous, happy, and be good citizens, with the right to vote and have a voice in the government of the Territory restricted in this way.

By the passage of this bill Congress admits that what some of the States have done in the way of denying the right to vote to the ignorant and vicious is not only necessary, but right and proper, and therefore commendable.

Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the war with Spain many serious and vexed questions have come before Congress for settlement. While that war was in progress, as a matter of necessity growing out of the war, we annexed the Hawaiian Islands. At the conclusion of that war we had obtained by treaty with Spain the cession of Porto Rico and, so far as Spain could give to us by treaty, the Philippine Islands.

The Hawaiian Islands are a part of the United States to-day, as much so as is the Territory of Oklahoma, or the State of Pennsylvania. Not only is this true of the Hawaiian Islands, but it is also true as to the island of Porto Rico. The Hawaiian Islands annexed by joint resolution of Congress, carrying into effect the offer and agreement of the government of those islands, and Porto Rico ceded to us by treaty with Spain, the inhabitants of the island being most willing, both stand on the same footing as Territories of the United States, and each of them is entitled to the same consideration, for over both Territories the Constitution of the United States extends equally and to the same extent that it extends over any Territory or State under the jurisdiction of the United States.

In the bill before the House no attempt is made to legislate for the Hawaiian Islands except under the provisions and strictly within the limitations of the Constitution of the United States. Particularly is this true in the matter of taxation. In the bill before the House the trade of the Hawaiian Islands with other Territories and States of the Union stands upon the same footing in that there is no discrimination whatever. In dealing with Porto Rico the majority in this House have attempted to treat her in a very different manner. For Porto Rico, the effort is made to treat the island as if the same was not a part of the United States and to impose a tariff upon certain of her products coming into our ports.

Why this discrimination? Why treat the island of Porto Rico differently to the way we treat and deal with the Hawaiian Islands? If one is a part of the United States and under its jurisdiction the other is. We treat the Hawaiians as citizens of the United States, why not treat the Porto Ricans in the same way? Both are entitled to all the benefits, privileges, and immunities conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon any citizen. In the matter of impost duties or taxation the products of these territories must be treated the same in all respects as we treat the products of Pennsylvania or California.

Mr. Chairman, in a few words I will give my opinion as to why the Hawaiian Islands have been treated as a part of the United States and why Porto Rico has been treated as a foreign territory. It has been said by those advocating the imposition of a duty on the products of Porto Rico shipped into the United States that, first, Congress has a right to do so under the Constitution; second, that in order to raise money to relieve the sufferings of the people of the island it must be done, and third, that to do so is to strike a severe blow at the sugar and tobacco trusts; therefore it is necessary.

In answer to the first proposition, Mr. Chairman, I will say that Congress has no right or authority under the Constitution of the United States to levy a tariff on the products of Porto Rico coming into our ports, because Porto Rico is a part of our territory.

As to the second proposition, in my opinion no good, but only harm, can result to the Porto Ricans from the imposition of this tax.

As to the third proposition, I think it amounts to jesting with a serious question.

If this is true, would it not be equally a blow at the trusts to impose a tax upon the products of the Hawaiian Islands coming into the United States? Why, if it is necessary in dealing with Porto Rico to impose a tariff upon her products in order to strike a blow at the trusts, is the necessity and the argument not equally as strong in the case of Hawaii? If it is necessary to strike a blow at the trusts in one case, it is in the other.

No, Mr. Chairman, these are not the reasons for the imposition of a tariff upon the products of Porto Rico.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the reason is that in the Hawaiian Islands the greater part of all that is valuable and productive to any great or considerable extent, including the land and franchises, is owned by capitalists, speculators, and trusts. On the other hand, in Porto Rico this state of facts does not exist. Since we acquired Porto Rico from Spain there has not been time for the capitalists, the speculators, and the trusts to manipulate and obtain possession of the valuable lands and franchises.

Mr. Chairman, if like conditions existed in Porto Rico that exist in the Hawaiian Islands in the ownership of lands, franchises, and other valuable property, I submit that no fight would have been made by the sugar and tobacco trusts, or anyone else, to impose a tax upon the products of Porto Rico. Mr. Oxnard and Mr. Myrick would never have been heard of in connection with Porto Rican legislation.

Mr. STOKES. Will it disturb the gentleman to interpose a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Not at all.

Mr. STOKES. Do I understand you to imply that that probably is the reason why the tariff was imposed upon the products of Porto Rico?

Mr. FINLEY. I think that is why the sugar and tobacco trusts are in favor of the Porto Rican bill. I take it that the trusts reasonably suppose that by proper effort on their part during the continuance of the tariff that the trade of Porto Rico will be hampered by the iniquitous and unlawful burden imposed upon her trade. The value of property in the island, now very low, will continue so, and they will be enabled to obtain possession of the greater part, and then they will be most anxious for Congress to treat Porto Rico as we propose to treat the Hawaiian Islands in the bill under consideration.

Mr. STOKES. A pretty good deduction.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think that we are treating the Hawaiian Islands as we should treat them in this bill, as I understand the Constitution of the United States and as I believe its provisions imperatively demand. We give to them the rights of citizenship. We deny to them nothing that is given to other citizens of the United States as such, whether they reside in a Territory or in a State.

I believe that this is the correct construction of the Constitution of the United States. Something has been said in the debate to the effect that the bill before the House extends the Constitution of the United States over the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with this argument. In my judgment, the Constitution of the United States can not be extended over territory belonging to the United States by an act of Congress, for the reason that over all territory of the United States the Constitution extends by its own force, and any act of Congress for this purpose is a nullity.

Mr. Chairman, in admitting the products of Hawaii to our ports, without taxation or any discrimination whatever, we but obey the Constitution of the United States and carry out the practice of our Government in the past, and act in accordance with an unbroken line of judicial decisions by our Supreme Court construing the Constitution. In denying to Porto Rico the same rights the majority go contrary to all precedent in the history of our Government, and in the teeth of both the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

When the Porto Rican bill was under consideration in this House, the Republican position was that the Constitution of the United States did not follow the flag, and its provisions were not coextensive with the jurisdiction of the United States over territory, and that territory within our jurisdiction, over which Congress had not extended its provisions, did not fall within the provisions of the Federal Constitution. It was argued strenuously by the majority that the Constitution could only be extended to newly acquired territory by an act of Congress.

It seems from an examination of the arguments made in support of the position of the Republicans in this matter that the reasons for their position are: to avoid its provisions in some of our new possessions or territories, first, as to citizenship, and, second, its limitations as to taxation. In a republic, such as ours, there can only be citizens and uniformity of taxation; and free intercourse between all citizens of the republic is absolutely necessary. These two propositions are the groundwork and underlying principles without which there can be no republic.

Section 2 of Article VI of the Constitution provides that—

> This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The language of this section is not that the Constitution shall be the supreme law of the various States in the Union, or the supreme law of the States and Territories, but that the Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land. It is immaterial whether that land is within the boundaries of a sovereign State or whether it is comprised within the boundaries of a Territory not yet admitted into the Union as a sovereign State. Over all land, including States and Territories, where the jurisdiction of the United States extends, the supreme law of the land is the Constitution of the United States. The only question, then, as to where the Constitution extends, is one of jurisdiction. If the jurisdiction exists, the flag and the Constitution go along with it.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the Republicans, having recognized in a practical way this principle, in the case of Hawaii, will find some difficulty in explaining to the American people their course in ignoring the principle in the case of Porto Rico. The action of the Democrats and Republicans in the House, in the case of Hawaii, is an unanswerable argument that the Republican majority is wrong in the proposed legislation for Porto Rico.

Section 1 of Article XIII is a further expression in the Constitution of the United States that the provisions of the Constitution extend to all territory over which our flag floats, and that it is coextensive with jurisdiction. Section 1 of Article XIII reads:

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

This article expressly provides that the provisions of the Constitution shall extend to all territory over which the United States has jurisdiction. We have not in the past one hundred and twenty-four years governed any territory except under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and I believe that the Hawaiians and Porto Ricans can be governed better under its provisions than by any other form of government. We can govern them in no other way.

The United States can not long exist with a part of the Territory within its jurisdiction under a constitutional government and the balance under a nonconstitutional government. In the case of the Territory of Hawaii we give full force and effect to the provisions of subsections 5 and 6 and section 1 of the Constitution, which provides as follows:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

In the case of Porto Rico the majority deny this, and attempt to justify their course upon the ground that Congress has supreme authority over the property and territory of the United States. No one denies that Congress has jurisdiction over property and territory of the United States; but that jurisdiction is limited. It only is jurisdiction to do what is authorized by the Constitution. It has no jurisdiction in a State, Territory, or elsewhere to do those things prohibited by that instrument.

That the Constitution and jurisdiction of the United States are coextensive is evident from a consideration of section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution, which provides:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

The word "State" is used in this clause of the Constitution, yet this is the only provision in the Constitution making it a duty of Congress to protect from invasion. The word "State" as used here is synonymous with the word "Territory." Therefore it is the duty of Congress to protect each and every part of the domain subject to its jurisdiction from invasion; that is, each of the various 45 States and all of its Territories, including Hawaii and Porto Rico. It is also our duty to guarantee to each of them a republican form of government.

To my mind it can not be contended successfully that it is the duty of Congress, under the provisions of the Constitution, to protect Porto Rico from invasion without admitting under the same authority that it is equally our duty to give to her a republican form of government. In the case of Porto Rico, in considering the legislation proposed by the Republican party, in determining whether or not the Constitution is being violated, the question naturally arises, What is a republican form of government? The answer can only be, as it has been, "A government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

The right of local self-government and that all government shall be under the restrictions and limitations of a written constitution is absolutely essential to a republican form of government. We recognize this principle, and give a republican form of government to Hawaii. The majority deny the application of this principle in the case of Porto Rico, and refuse to her a republican form of government. The framers of the Constitution were jealous of giving to Congress unlimited power, and did not do so.

The Constitution of the United States is the sole grant of power to Congress, and this power is limited in the grant. This is necessarily the case, as I have stated, in a republican form of government; under an imperial form of government, a written constitution defining the rights of the citizen and protecting him from oppression by the government, is not usual, as in the case of England, having no written constitution other than Magna Charta. Her Parliament, in all matters outside of the provisions of that instrument, has unlimited power, and there is no such thing as an unconstitutional act of Parliament. And, because of oppression by the British Parliament in the exercise of this unlimited power, our revolutionary fathers rebelled, achieved their independence, and gave to us a system of government with a written Constitution, and forever guaranteed to the American citizen exemption from the oppressions they had suffered.

In the bill before the House, Hawaii is placed under our customs and revenue laws, as required by the Constitution of the United States. The majority here refuse this to Porto Rico. In the Hawaiian bill the principle that all taxation by Congress must be uniform and for a national purpose is recognized and carried out. In the Porto Rican bill taxes are imposed upon the products of that island coming into the United States, thus violating the rule of uniformity in taxation required by the Constitution, and the proceeds of this tax are appropriated for local purposes in the island.

Congress derives its sole power to levy taxes under the Constitution. It can only levy taxes upon the subjects and in the manner prescribed by that grant of power. If the Constitution does not extend to Porto Rico, and its people are not citizens of the United States, I am at a loss to know where Congress obtains its grant of power to levy taxes at all, as the grant of power can not extend beyond the jurisdiction and operation of the instrument giving the power. Porto Rico is unquestionably a part of the territory of the United States, subject to its jurisdiction, and therefore within the operation of the Constitution and all of its provisions and limitations; taxes can only be levied in strict accord with the rules therein provided.

The language of the Constitution is unmistakable that no preference shall be given, that the taxes shall be uniform and levied only for national purposes, and the following authorities settle beyond question the soundness of this contention:

Story on the Constitution, edition 1859, sections 154 to 159.

It was decided in Cross vs. Harrison (16 Howard, 197), that—

By the ratification of the treaty (with Mexico) California became a part of the United States. And as there is nothing differently stipulated in the treaty with respect to commerce, it became instantly bound and privileged by the laws which Congress had passed to raise a revenue from imports and tonnage.

On page 198 the court said:

Having been shown that the ratifications of the treaty made California a part of the United States, and that as soon as it became so the territory became subject to the acts which were in force to regulate foreign commerce with the United States, after those had ceased which had been instituted for its regulation as a belligerent right (i. e., strictly a war tariff under military occupation).

In Longborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton, 317), the Supreme Court held:

The power then to lay and collect duties, imports, and excises may be exercised and must be exercised throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania, and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imports, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than in the other.

Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, 129 and 499, states the rule to be:

Taxes should only be levied for those purposes which properly constitute a public burden.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MORRIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. BENNETT, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, before yielding the rest of my time, I desire to state that, as has probably been observed by the committee, this bill simply strikes out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitutes the House bill. It is the House bill we have been considering and shall consider to-morrow for amendment.

I simply desire to avoid reading both bills, as we otherwise might have to do, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that in reading the bill we simply read the House bill. I have seen gentlemen upon both sides, and I understand there is no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. In the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] and in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I suggest that the House is rather thin. There is no quorum here.

Mr. KNOX. I hope the gentleman will not raise that question.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] requests unanimous consent that when the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule is begun, the House bill proposed as a substitute for the Senate bill be alone read. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to object to this, because I wish to hasten the reading of the bill; but the bill is a long one, and will undoubtedly provoke a good deal of discussion, and it is a good deal of a question whether the end of the bill will be reached before 4 o'clock. While not objecting to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I also request that two small amendments may be considered as pending.

Mr. KNOX. I will say that I will not object to that, but I would like to have this consent obtained first, so there will be no question about it. I ask the Chair to put my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Now I renew my request that the amendments which I send to the Clerk's desk may be considered as pending, to come up at the proper time, in case the reading of the bill is not finished in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the amendments which the Clerk will now report be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 89, from and including line 20 to and including line 9, on page 90, and insert the following:

"TERRITORIAL COMMISSIONER.

"The governor may nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the said Territory of Hawaii, appoint a commissioner of said Territory, to reside at the capital of the United States, and to represent the interests of said Territory of Hawaii in its relations with the United States. Said commissioner shall, when appointed, be a citizen and bona fide resident of said Territory; his term of office shall be two years; his salary shall be $5,000 per annum, which, with his actual, necessary traveling expenses in coming from said Territory and returning thereto, shall be paid by the United States."

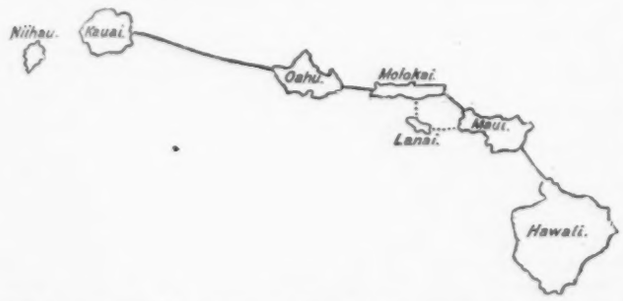
"SEC. 103. Nothing in this act shall be construed, taken, or held to imply a pledge or promise that the Territory of Hawaii will at any future time be admitted as a State or attached to any State."

Renumber section 103 of the bill as section 104.



The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand what would be the effect, in a parliamentary way, of consenting now that amendments which the gentleman says he will offer to a section may be considered as pending. Suppose the section is never read. Would the gentleman insist that these amendments should be pending? I make the point of order against them, and shall not consent to their being admitted; but I want to state why I do it, because I can not see how they could be considered as pending in the House by any agreement made in the committee. It seems to me that such an agreement as this ought not to be made. I have no objection to their being read for information, but I shall object to any consent being given for any agreement that they shall be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, or the remainder of the time allotted to this side, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, the islands of Hawaii are of volcanic origin and lie 2,100 miles out in the Pacific southwest from San Francisco. From Honolulu to Yokohama is 3,445 miles, and from Honolulu to Hongkong is 4,961 miles. From Unalaska, the nearest port on the north, to Tahiti, the nearest port to the south, is 4,400 miles.

By reason of the vast waste of water that surrounds them and by reason of the limited coaling and steaming capacity of even the strongest vessels, these islands command the North Pacific as Gibraltar commands the Mediterranean, and strategically they have no rival in the world.

In annexing them we have annexed the only insular vantage ground from which a hostile fleet might have made descent upon our western coast and to which it could have returned. By annexation, therefore, we have posted these islands like sentinels in the midst of the Pacific to guard our western coast.

Commercially they lie at the crossroads of the sea. The lines of ocean traffic intersect there, and in the future a tremendous and increasing commerce will enter and leave Pearl Harbor when it shall have become the meeting place and transfer depot of the ships of Russia, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and the American ships of the Atlantic and the Pacific, joined by the Nicaragua Canal in the carrying trade of a nation whose never-resting physical and mental energy must have constant and increasing market for its output.

The commercial and strategic importance of these islands is far out of proportion to their size. They number seven inhabited islands and a dozen rocky or sandy shoals and reefs, with a total area of about 6,740 square miles and a population of 110,000 souls.

From Hawaii, the largest of the group, they trend northwesterly. Hawaii has 2,500,000 acres, and its principal town is Hilo.

Maui is next in size and location to Hawaii.

Oahu is third in size, but largest in population. On the southern side of Oahu is Honolulu, the capital city of the Hawaiian Islands, with a population of 30,000. A little to the east of Honolulu city and harbor is Pearl Harbor, with a water surface of about 10 square miles and a depth ranging from 20 to 90 feet.

Kaui is fourth in size and population.

On the north side of the island of Molokai is the leper settlement, where about 1,200 lepers are fed, clothed, and cared for at governmental expense. Attended by a few monks and nuns of the Order of St. Francis, they live out their days there, cut off from the rest of the world by impassable mountains and by the sea.

Sugar growing is the principal industry of the Hawaiian Islands and is carried on principally by corporations with capital stock ranging from $200,000 to $4,000,000, although sugar growing by small farmers on the cooperative plan, with a central mill for a group of farms, has been commenced.

Sugar can only be grown profitably by artesian irrigation, requiring heavy outlay for outfit and machinery. A large part of the volcanic soil is adapted to coffee, but coffee, although a common product, is not as yet an important commercial industry. Rice growing is exclusively in the hands of Chinese. The islands are rich in farming and grazing lands. The general conformation of the islands, they being of volcanic origin, is a general downward slope from an elevated central part to the sea. Climate, temperature, and products vary on the mountain sides according to altitude, cattle being raised on the highlands, coffee lower down, then sugar, then taro, and rice down by the sea.

HISTORICAL.

It is believed that the islands began to be inhabited about fourteen hundred years ago. Civilization was introduced by Captain Cook's discovery in 1778. The islands were brought under the sway of Kamehameha about the beginning of this century. He died in 1819, but the islands continued under the Kamehameha dynasty down to the death of Kamehameha V in 1872. He was followed by David Lunalilo for about a year; he by David Kalakaua for about seventeen years, and he by his sister, Liliuokalani. The monarchy was overthrown January 17, 1893. The constitution of the republic was promulgated July 4, 1894. A joint resolution of the Congress of the United States for annexation was approved July 7, 1898.

The transfer of sovereignty was formally made at Honolulu August 12, 1898, and kings' crowns, kings' councils, and feudalism went out of business in Hawaii forever, and the islands which American missionaries had redeemed, which were already American in institutions, laws, and sympathies, were merged into the great body of the American Republic for all time.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT.

By this bill we provide that the Hawaiian Islands shall hereafter be known as "The Territory of Hawaii," and that a Territorial government, with its capital at Honolulu, is hereby established.

At the outset we are met by the question of citizenship, and we have declared in section 4 of this bill "that all persons who were citizens of the republic of Hawaii on August 12, 1898, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States."

By the constitution of the republic of Hawaii "all persons born or naturalized in the Hawaiian Islands and subject to the jurisdiction of the republic are citizens thereof."

The government which we have framed for the republic of Hawaii may be easily divided into the three coordinate branches—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial.

THE EXECUTIVE.

Under the head of the executive we provide for a governor to be appointed by the President for a term of four years or until his successor shall be appointed and qualified; that he shall be 35 years old and a citizen of Hawaii; that he shall have a salary of $5,000 per annum, $500 for incidentals, and $2,000 for a private secretary.

Among his powers and duties it is provided that he shall be commander in chief of militia; that he may grant pardons or reprieves for offenses against the Territory and against the United States, pending decision by the President.

When necessary he may call upon military or naval forces of the United States in Hawaii or summon the posse comitatus or call out the militia. He may suspend the writ of habeas corpus or place the Territory under martial law. He is given the veto power and the power of removal when not otherwise provided.

Under the the head of the "appointing power" he has power to appoint—

1. Judges circuit courts.
2. Attorney-general.
3. Treasurer.
4. Commissioner of public lands.
5. Commissioner of agriculture.
6. Superintendent of public works.
7. Superintendent of public instruction.
8. Auditor.
9. Deputy auditor.
10. Surveyor.
11. High sheriff.
12. Members board of health.
13. Commissioners of public instruction.
14. Boards of registration and inspectors of elections.
15. All other public boards.

There is also a secretary appointed for a term of four years by the President, and an attorney-general appointed for four years by the President.

THE LEGISLATIVE.

Now, as to the legislative branch, we provide for a Delegate from Hawaii to the United States House of Representatives. That provision was inserted by the unanimous desire of the members of the committee regardless of party. He is to be elected by voters qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives of the Territory of Hawaii. He must possess the qualifications of members of the house of representatives of Hawaii, and the time and place and manner of holding elections for Delegate are to be as fixed by law.

We provide for a Territorial legislature composed of two houses, the upper house to be known as the senate and the lower house to be known as the house.

I will append to my remarks a diagram which I have prepared, showing in outline the whole scheme of Territorial government. [For diagram see next page.]

Mr. HILL. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question there?

Mr. HAMILTON. I think not.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask you to state to the House how that Territorial Delegate is to be elected, on the division of nationalities. In the voting how many Kanakas, how many Portuguese, and how many Americans will vote for that Delegate?

Mr. HAMILTON. Before I finish I will undertake to make that part of the situation clear. We have stricken out the property qualification which the bill originally provided. We only retain an educational qualification for the people of Hawaii; and I think I come within the bounds of absolute truth when I state to the gentleman that there is not a man, woman, or child above 12 years of age who was born in Hawaii, capable of acquiring learning, who can not read and write in English or Hawaiian. And, sir, I believe that these people are well qualified to understand and comprehend the meaning of the elective franchise. Now I come to the inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. I do not question that matter, but the point I want to make is this: That the moment this provision for suffrage is made you then and there inaugurate a race war, which will drive these islands into a state of confusion for the next twenty-five years.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman along that line. This is a most interesting question. I can see how gentlemen may mistrust the capacity of these people, and I will discuss that question, and will pass as rapidly as possible from this branch of the discussion to that. I have shown how the bill provides that there shall be a Delegate to the United States House of Representatives, to be elected by voters qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives of Hawaii, who shall possess the qualifications of members of the house of representatives of Hawaii. Now, what are the qualifications of the members of the senate and house in the Territory of Hawaii, and what are the qualifications of voters for members and senators?

First, the Senate is composed of fifteen members, who hold for a term of four years, elected from four districts, and vacancies are filled at general and special elections; they must be male citizens of the United States, 25 years old, must have resided in Hawaii three years, and be qualified to vote for senators. Each voter may cast one vote for each senator, and the required number of candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be senator from that district. Voters must have the qualification of voters for representatives—that is, they must be male citizens of the United States, must have resided one year in Hawaii, three months in the district, must be 21 years old, and must be registered, must have paid a poll tax, and must be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language.

Now, the house of the Territory of Hawaii is composed of 30 members, elected from six districts every second year; vacancies may be filled at general or special elections; they must be male citizens of the United States, 25 years old, resident of Hawaii for three years, and be qualified to vote for representatives. Each voter may cast a vote for as many representatives as are to be elected from the district, and the required number of candidates receiving the highest number of votes are to be representatives. Voters must be male citizens 21 years old, residents of Hawaii one year and the district three months, must be registered, must pay a poll tax, and be able to speak, read, and write the English or the Hawaiian language.

Mr. HILL. What of the voting population under the law as you have it?

Mr. HAMILTON. The last registration of voters, under the monarchy, was: Hawaiians, 9,554; Portuguese, 2,091; foreigners, 1,770, and that includes Americans; total, 13,415. These are as near the figures as I can get them.

Mr. HILL. Now, with the property qualification taken off, have you any estimate?

Mr. HAMILTON. With the property qualification taken off, it is no more than an estimate. The estimated number of voters without the property qualification would be: Hawaiian, about 10,000; Portuguese, about 2,300; Americans and Europeans, about 3,000.

Mr. HILL. Then that would be about 4 to 1.

Mr. HAMILTON. That is true. I am anxious to get to that because it has interested me, and I think it will be interesting to the gentlemen on this floor.

THE JUDICIARY.

I want to touch on the judiciary, however, because I started out to divide the government into the executive, legislative, and judicial. We provide for a supreme court, with one chief justice and not less than two associate justices. The judicial power of the Territory is vested in one supreme court and such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish.

Besides the supreme court and the circuit courts, five in number, there are district courts which correspond practically to our justice courts in this country. No person can sit as a judge or juror in any case who is related by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree to parties in interest, or who shall be interested pecuniarily personally or through relatives who are parties. The Territory is divided into five circuits, and the judges are appointed by the governor, and they hold office for six years.

A Federal court is established for the Territory, which shall be a judicial district, called the "district of Hawaii," and be included in the Ninth judicial circuit of the United States, and shall have jurisdiction of cases commonly cognizable by both circuit and district courts. The district attorney has a salary of $2,000 and the marshal a salary of $2,000. They are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

At this point I want to call attention to some statements made by the gentleman from Indiana, from the Fort Wayne district [Mr. ROBINSON], not unkindly, but because the nature of his remarks makes it proper that there should be some allusion to them. He made the statement that the bill as presented was an un-American bill—I mean the bill presented by the commissioners—and he said that the bill presented finally by this committee was that bill with very little change.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman evidently prepared his speech with reference to a state of facts which does not exist. I presume he prepared it with reference to the bill as found in the report of the commissioners that did provide for a property qualification. The gentleman made some reference to the alien contract labor law, and because there has been delay in connection with that he said there had been an opportunity for many Japanese to get into Hawaii after the transfer of sovereignty.

Now, I simply want to call attention to this fact in answer to that: That a bill to extend our alien contract labor law in this country to Hawaii was presented in this House and passed this House February 6, 1899. It went to the United States Senate, where its consideration was objected to by Senator MORGAN. Let the responsibility for this matter rest where it properly should. The Republicans did not then control the Senate of the United States.

THE PROPERTY QUALIFICATION.

Strong argument was presented, and I come to the question which interests many gentlemen here and which has been of great interest to me; and if I lay undue strength upon this, you will lay it to that interest. Strong argument was presented for the property qualification as the bill was presented by the commissioners who visited the island and who framed the original bill.

This feature was embodied in the bill as reported by the commission who visited the islands, but has not been retained by the committee. Now, the argument presented in favor of a property qualification—and this will be interesting to my friend from Connecticut—was that the native vote will largely outnumber the white or Anglo-Saxon vote, as will also the Portuguese vote. It is said that unless there be some means of control, the legislature must inevitably pass quickly into the hands of the natives, who would only be checked by the veto of the governor, which might be overborne by a two-thirds vote.

That if the natives combine, it is reasonable to suppose that no white person could be elected to a seat in the legislature.

That under the monarchy the upper house was composed of nobles appointed for life.

OUTLINE

PROPOSED GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

H. R. No. 2972.

THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

THE EXECUTIVE.

Governor — Appointed by President for 4 years or until successor is appointed and qualified. Shall be 35 years old and citizen of Hawaii. Salary, $5,000 (93); $500 incidentals, traveling, and $2,000 for private secretary.

Sec. 66. Powers and duties (66, 67). Shall be commander in chief of militia; may grant pardons or reprieves for offenses against Territory and against United States, pending decision by President. When necessary may call upon military or naval forces of the United States in Hawaii, or summon posse comitatus, or call out militia; may suspend writ of habeas corpus or place Territory under martial law; has veto power; power of removal when not otherwise provided (80).

Other executive officers.

- Secretary (69), 4 yrs.; appointed by President; salary, $3,000 (93).

  4. Commissioner of public lands.
  5. Commissioner of agriculture.
  6. Superintendent of public works.
  7. Superintendent of public instruction.
  8. Auditor
  9. Deputy auditor.
  10. Surveyor.
  11. High sheriff.
  12. Members board of health.
  13. Commissioners of public instruction.
  14. Boards of registration and inspectors of elections.
  15. All other public boards.

Treasurer (72), appointed by governor for 4 years (80).
Commissioner of public lands (73), appointed by governor for 4 years.
Commissioner of agriculture and forestry (74), appointed by governor for 4 years (80).
Superintendent of public works (75), appointed by governor for 4 years (80).
Superintendent of public instruction (76), appointed by governor for 4 years (80).
Auditor and deputy auditor (77), appointed by governor for 4 years.
Surveyor (78), appointed by governor for 4 years.
High sheriff (79), appointed by governor for 4 years.

LEGISLATIVE.

"The legislature of the Territory of Hawaii" SHALL CONSIST OF TWO HOUSES (12).

There shall be a delegate to the United States House of Representatives, to be elected by voters qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives of Hawaii, who shall possess qualifications of members of house of representatives of Hawaii; time, place, and manner of holding elections as fixed by law (86).

First session, third Wednesday February, 1901, and biennially thereafter (41).
Special session may be convened (43).
Sessions 60 days long, except that governor may extend 30 days (43).
All proceedings in English language (44).
Bills must pass three readings on separate days (46), and final passage must be on majority vote of all members by ayes and noes.
Governor may veto appropriation bills in whole or in part (49).
Bill may be passed over veto by two-thirds vote (50).

PROVISIONS COMMON TO BOTH HOUSES.

General elections, first Tuesday after first Monday in November, 1900, and biennially thereafter (14). Each house judge of election, returns, and qualifications of own members (15). Can not hold other office (16-17). Oath of office (19). Each determines its own rules. One-fifth can demand ayes and noes. Majority constitutes quorum for business, except on final passage; then majority of all members required (22). Less than quorum may adjourn and compel attendance (23). Each house punishes members (25). Members exempt from liability elsewhere for words (28). Arrest (29). Salary, $400 each session and 10 cents a mile each way; $200 extra session.

SENATE

Composed of 15 members; 4 years; elected from 4 districts, alternating 7 and 8 biennially (30, 32).
Vacancies filled at general and special elections (31). Must be male citizens of the United States, 25 years old, resided in Hawaii 3 years, and be qualified to vote for senators (34).

Voting for senators. Each voter may cast one vote for each senator from district (61), and required number of candidates receiving highest number of votes shall be senators in district (61). Voters must have qualifications of voters for representatives, i. e., male citizen of the United States, residence 1 year in Hawaii, 3 months in district, 21 years old (60-62); must have registered, paid poll tax, and be able to speak, read, and write English or Hawaiian (60).

HOUSE

Composed of 30 members, elected from 6 districts every second year (35). Term until next general election (36, 38). Vacancies filled at general or special elections (37); must be male citizens of United States, 25 years old, resided in Hawaii 3 years, and qualified to vote for representatives (40).

Voting for representatives. Each voter may cast a vote for as many representatives as are to be elected from district (59), and required number of candidates receiving highest number of votes shall be representatives from that district (59). Voters must be male citizens of the United States, 21 years old, have resided in Hawaii 1 year, and in district 3 months; have registered, paid poll tax, and be able to speak, read, and write English or Hawaiian.

THE JUDICIARY.

The judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in one supreme court and such inferior courts as legislature may from time to time establish (82).
No person can sit as judge or juror who is related by affinity or consanguinity to parties within third degree or who shall be interested pecuniarily, personally, or through relatives who are parties (84).
Judges liable to impeachment for causes specified (85), and senate shall be court to try impeachments, with chief justice presiding.

Supreme court: One chief justice, two associate. Judges supreme court appointed by President of the United States by and with advice and consent of the Senate (82). Hold 9 years (80).

Laws relative to, continued in force, except as modified by this act; subject to modification by Congress or legislature (83).

Circuit court — Territory divided into five circuits. Judges appointed by governor. Hold 6 years (80).

Territory of Hawaii shall be a judicial district, called "District of Hawaii," and be included in the Ninth judicial circuit of the United States (87), and shall have jurisdiction of cases commonly cognizable by both circuit and district courts (87).

Federal court — President of the United States, by and with advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint district judge (87).
District attorney, salary $2,000, and marshal, salary $2,000 (93), appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (87).

Internal-revenue district — The Territory shall constitute an internal-revenue district (88).

Customs district — The Territory shall constitute a customs district, with ports of entry and delivery at Honolulu, Hilo, Mahukona, and Kahului (89).

Wharves — Wharves and landings shall remain under control of Hawaii, and revenues derived therefrom shall belong to Hawaii, provided same are applied to their maintenance and repair (90).

Quarantine (98).
Crown lands (100).
Naturalization (101).
Chinese certificates of residence (102).

That after the overthrow of the monarchy a property qualification was imposed upon electors for senators.

That this created a distinct class of conservative men who held in check the lower house and gave representation to those who by their thrift and energy and capital and intelligence have built up the country.

That the natives can cast 4 votes to the Anglo-Saxons' 1.

That the native has not acquired the habit of self-government, and that to suppose he has would be to suppose the most remarkable example in history of the rapid rise of a people from barbarism to advanced civilization.

That the natives have few wants, which are supplied by little labor: that they are naturally shiftless, improvident, and unacquisitive.

That in 1840 every native was given a homestead in fee simple, but that the majority of the natives have since parted with their homesteads and have spent the proceeds.

That a few retain their homesteads, but rent them out to Chinese and other tenants.

That they are herdsmen, excellent sailors, and drivers of horses in cities and on plantations, but that very few take to merchandise, and those who do take to a primitive kind of merchandising, involving no capital, such as small retail fruit and fish stores.

That, being by the very necessity of the case "hewers of wood and drawers of water," without hereditary or acquired commercial tendencies, they entertain more or less political jealousy toward the more prosperous white man, although personally and privately friendly and dependent upon him, and that this jealousy is stimulated by irresponsible white "beach comers" for purposes of their own.

That under mere manhood suffrage, with educational qualification superadded, the native population might exclude white representatives from the legislature or return white demagogues.

That the native is kind, affectionate, generous, well-meaning, quick to learn, and personally loyal, but is a child of the Tropics, and believes the last story he hears.

That he has not yet learned to regard the ballot as a moral force, and that, being irresponsible financially, his domination of the legislature would probably lead to a period of political corruption in which the thrifty, educated, and progressive classes would be obliged to purchase immunity from legislative oppression, and legislation would by reason thereof become a matter of bargain and sale.

That the "republic" and the proposed Territorial government have been evolved out of a condition which was indeed supported by the native vote, but was abolished because the native race had proved itself incapable of self-government according to the Anglo-Saxon standard.

I have endeavored to present that argument just as strongly as it has ever been presented to the committee or could have been presented to the commissioners, who are honorable, conscientious men, and who visited the island.

Now, two points must be taken into consideration in dealing with this question: First, the senate is composed of 15 members, elected from four districts, spread all over the islands, and the house is composed of 30 members, elected from six districts. It will be observed that the natives have abandoned their homesteads and have assembled in cities, and principally in Honolulu. This being true, it seems to me that it would be difficult for the natives so to spread themselves evenly over the districts as to be able to control the legislature in that way. That is one safeguard which presents itself to my mind. The next is this: It is conceded that the natives are many of them intelligent people, who are able to comprehend and appreciate the meaning of the electoral privilege and are capable of legislation.

Now, gentlemen—and I put this to my friend from Connecticut—this problem spreads itself beyond these islands and reaches a great, fundamental, underlying principle of our nationality.

Mr. HILL. Did not the bill which the committee reported last year include a property qualification?

Mr. HAMILTON. I was not on that committee——

Mr. HILL. Did not the commissioners who went to Hawaii report when they came back in favor of a property qualification?

Mr. HAMILTON. I have so stated.

Mr. HILL. Now, let me ask one more question. But for the acquisition of Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines, would any change have been made in this matter of self-government for Hawaii?

Mr. HAMILTON. Oh, I do not think that had anything to do with it. I should like very much, if I had the time, to discuss the subject of Cuba and Puerto Rico and the Philippines, though those subjects have been pretty well discussed. I want to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Committee on Territories have reported this bill unanimously, both Republicans and Democrats supporting it. They have tried to consider these questions with absolute fairness. The question of Puerto Rico and the Philippines has not entered into the consideration of this bill at all. It has been our theory—and I think I voice the sentiments of the members of that committee—that each territory should come into the fraternity of this Union under our governmental control—under our Congressional control, if you please—on its own basis, and that the Government of the United States will be able to take care of each territory as it presents itself.

Now, I say that that problem spreads beyond these islands and reaches the underlying and fundamental principle of our nationality. All that the advocates for a property qualification have said in behalf of such a provision in Hawaii—all that my friend from Connecticut could probably say——

Mr. HILL. The gentleman must not make any mistake. I am not in favor of a property qualification—not at all—not under any circumstances anywhere. But I am opposed to starting a Territorial government in Hawaii with four Kanaka votes to every single vote of an intelligent white man.

Mr. HAMILTON. Does not the gentleman want to establish a government there?

Mr. HILL. I do, but not the kind of a government that this committee recommends.

Mr. HAMILTON. My time is too limited, and I presume the gentleman would not have an opportunity to present his views fully on this subject, or I should be interested in knowing what his scheme of government for that Territory might be. He is a very able man who is able to present, full fledged, a scheme of government offhand.

Mr. HILL. There is no hurry about it anyway.

Mr. HAMILTON. There is a good deal of hurry. Time enough has elapsed. They are afflicted with the bubonic plague, they are in suspense, and there should be some sort of government there.

Mr. HILL. Do you propose to annex that?

Mr. HAMILTON. We propose to annex Hawaii, certainly, and we propose to give those people some method of managing the conditions which exist there.

Now, let me proceed. I said that all that had been said here in favor of a property qualification for Hawaii has been said in favor of a property qualification generally. For instance, Mr. Paley, in speaking of the English constitution of the eighteenth century, in his work on Moral Philosophy, says:

> Before we ask to obtain anything more, consider duly what we have. We have a House of Commons, composed of 558 members, in which number are the most considerable landholders and merchants in the Kingdom; the heads of the army, the navy, and the law; the occupiers of great offices in the State, together with many private individuals, eminent by their knowledge, eloquence, and activity. If the country be not safe in such hands, in whom may it confide its interests? If such a number of such men be liable to the influence of corrupt motives, what assembly of men will be secure from the same danger? Does any scheme of representation promise to collect together more wisdom or to produce firmer integrity?

And yet what political party nowadays would dare to advocate a form of government as best because composed exclusively of rich men, officeholders, landholders, bondholders, railroad magnates, shipowners, trust promoters, and Army and Navy officers? Our form of government gives representation to all classes and professions, from the frontier homestead to the brownstone front, from the merchant prince to the laborer in the ditch, and between the two great extremes of abject poverty and superfluous wealth is the great body of the plain people, in whose hands our nationality is still safe, thank God. [Applause on the Republican side.] People, with a few more furbelows, perhaps, than in Lincoln's day. We have passed from the era of jeans to creased trousers, and the style of parting the hair differs according to age and the amount of hair; but we are still plain people. And, gentlemen, when the plain people of this great Government can not be trusted, then indeed our country is in danger.

Commenting upon the English reform bills of 1832 and 1837, and the exercise of the franchise generally, in advocating its limitation to those having educational and property qualifications, Mr. Lecky, in his work on Democracy and Liberty, says:

> Different methods will be employed. Sometimes the voter will be directly bribed or directly intimidated. He will vote for money or for drink, or in order to win the favor or avert the displeasure of some one who is more powerful than himself. The tenant will think of his landlord, the debtor of his creditor, the shopkeeper of his customer.
> A poor, struggling man called on to vote upon a question about which he cares nothing and knows nothing is surely not to be greatly blamed if he is governed by such considerations.
> A still larger number of votes will be won by persistent appeals to class cupidities.
> The demagogue will try to persuade the voter that by following a certain line of policy every member of society will obtain some advantage.
> He will encourage all their Utopias. He will hold out hopes that by breaking contracts or shifting taxation and the power of taxing or enlarging the paternal functions of government something of the property of one class may be transferred to another.
> He will also appeal persistently, and often successfully, to class jealousies and antipathies. All the divisions which naturally grow out of class lines and the relations between employer and employed will be studiously inflamed.
> Envy, covetousness, prejudice, will become great forces in political propagandism. Every real grievance will be aggravated. Every redressed grievance will be revived. Every imaginary grievance will be encouraged.

If the poorest, most numerous, most ignorant class can be persuaded to hate the smaller class and to vote solely for the purpose of injuring them, the party manager will have achieved his end.

A bad harvest or some disaster over which the Government can have no more influence than over the march of the planets will produce a discontent that will often govern dubious votes and may, perhaps, turn the scale in a nearly balanced election. * * *

There is another and very different class who are chiefly found in towns. They are the kind of men who may be seen loitering listlessly around the doors of every gin shop—men who, through drunkenness and idleness or dishonesty, have failed in the race of life; who either never possessed or have wholly lost the taste for honest, continuous work; who hang loosely on the verge of the criminal class and from whom the criminal classes are chiefly recruited. These men are not the real laborers, but their presence constitutes one of the chief difficulties and dangers of all labor questions, and in every period of revolution and anarchy they are galvanized into a sudden activity. With a very low suffrage they become an important element in many constituencies.

Without knowledge and without character, their instinct will be to use the power which is given them for predatory and anarchic purposes.

To break up society and to obtain a new deal in the goods of life will naturally be their object.

We recognize this picture. It delineates some campaigns in this country as if made to order.

Business depression, a dry time in summer, an unseasonable frost, are the demagogue's opportunity, and always have been and always will be.

The whittling statesman loitering at the gin-house door while his wife supports the family is not an unfamiliar figure in our civilization, and the candidate who goes about the country scattering firebrands of discontent from the rear ends of special cars has reappeared from time to time in our history and will soon again reappear in our history.

But I believe there is great truth, Mr. Chairman, in the theory that the right of free expression at the polls is in the nature of a safety valve, and as to the controlling influence which Mr. Lecky thinks the creditor may exercise over the debtor, we have controlled that somewhat by the Australian ballot system, and of late, in some recent campaigns, the man with a dollar ahead has been made to feel that he actually ought to conceal the fact or apologize.

To yield to the pessimistic theory that a man is not able to govern himself because of abuses here and there, would be to yield the consummation and flower of the evolution of political freedom which is typified and illustrated in our nationality, and if we can not yield it as a whole, we can not yield it in spots.

Sir, there is an underlying principle at stake here, dear to the hearts of all American citizens, more important than property, more important than the Hawaiian Islands, namely, the right of every American citizen to participate in the government to which he owes allegiance.

We doff our hats to no king. We make our own laws, and we rule our own political destinies. Here, between the Atlantic and the Pacific, between the lakes and the Gulf, there are thousands of people, white and black, who do not possess even the educational qualification which we exact here in this bill, and yet they are entitled to vote.

Macaulay somewhere satirically remarks in his history that none of those Virginia patriots who vindicated their separation from the mother country by proclaiming it to be a self-evident truth that all men were endowed by their Creator with an inalienable right to liberty would have had the slightest scruple about shooting any negro slave who had laid claim to that same inalienable right.

But by the arbitrament of war since that time we have determined on many battlefields in this country that a man's a man, tho' e'er so black, that a man's a man for a' that and a' that, and although it was once, as late as 1790, held among the States of this country that the right to vote and the right to hold office were dependent, not on manhood qualifications, but on religious opinions, on acres of land, and pounds, shillings, and pence.

Although it was held in Maryland, North Carolina, and South Carolina that a man must have 50 acres of land or personal property of the value of £30;

In New York that a man must be worth £20 York money or pay house rent of 40s. a year, pay his taxes, and carry his tax receipt in his pocket;

In Massachusetts that he must have a freehold estate yielding £3 a year or possess an estate worth £60;

In Connecticut an annual income of $7 from real estate rated on the tax list at $134;

In New Jersey, that a man must reside there, be of age, and have property, and in one other State the sole requirement was that the voter should have a white skin and property of the value of £10—

Although such were the laws of the earlier days of our Republic, since that time we have written with a firm hand the amendments to our Constitution which lift us now above the just reproach of history, and property qualification is an obsolete antiquity.

Property is not the only interest of men in the social compact. Man is something more than a mere taxpayer. He is above all a man, and the laws touch not only his field but they touch also the man. And it is one of the boasts as it is one of the bulwarks of our free American civilization that—

A mon's a mon though e'er sae puir—
A mon's a mon for a' that.

We are called upon here Congress after Congress to vote in contested-election cases where the colored man is defrauded of his right to vote, and where the proof is ample we unseat the man who is shown to have obtained his seat by defrauding the colored man of his right to vote. How would a gentleman's speech urging the right of the colored men in the South to exercise the right to vote read in parallel columns with his speech defending the property qualification for the Hawaiians?

Sir, there is force in the contention for a property qualification. It is ably defended by such men as Lecky in his Democracy and Liberty; but I do not see how we can make local exception to a great underlying rule of our Republic. We have not heretofore required a property qualification in any of our Territories, although riotous and ignorant legislation might in some instances have been apprehended.

Then, sir, put the proposition to yourself. Let any man put the proposition to himself. If a man must first get an education, and then must get real estate of the value of $1,000 and carry his tax receipt in his pocket, or have obtained a position drawing $600 a year salary, how many absent-minded literary beggars would have been excluded from "Fame's eternal camping ground" and had to wander down below, while some gentlemen with the money-getting instinct would have been sitting in the forum or swaggering in the public glare?

It is said of the late Emory A. Storrs that some rich men were once chaffing him about the fact that he had not acquired much property. Mr. Storrs stood it for a while and then said: "Gentlemen, the money-making instinct is a mere animal trait. It is the instinct of accumulation. The chipmunk possesses it; the beaver possesses it in an eminent degree. Doubtless the rich men of Athens sat around with their thumbs in the armholes of their vests and talked about the splendid work they were doing on the Parthenon; but, gentlemen, where are the rich men of Athens to-day, and where is Phidias?"

To my mind there is no true aristocracy except the aristocracy of brain. And it is true now, as it was true always, that—

Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.

And I would not be willing to put myself on record as the advocate of any government that would exclude a man from participating therein simply because he had not laid up dollars and cents. I can not give my support to a proposition which makes impecunious youth to stand longer and longer at the outer door of corporate opportunity waiting to be invited in and given a job and which makes his future subservient to some other man's money-making instinct. I do not denounce wealth. Far from it. I recognize that wealthy men are realizing their responsibilities to society now as they never have before. Some of the work of wealth now-a-days is magnificent, superb.

I know of their charities, I read of their magnanimity, and I realize that immunity from hard manual toil gives greater opportunity for reading and thought, and in some instances leads to brain expansion—in fewer instances to heart expansion.

But the men who have appeared on earth heretofore apparently charged with a message from God to the whole of mankind, who have been raised up as leaders in great crises, have come up from tow-paths, tanyards, from lonely frontier cabins, and from mangers, and I will not vote to put the property O. K. mark on any man's struggle upward. Let me supplement the subserviency of Mr. Paley and the pessimisms of Mr. Lecky with the splendid words of Lamartine:

When there is no election every man is a slave or a serf. When the election is limited to a small number of citizens, some are sovereigns and others are subjects; when the election pertains to all, no one is subject, no one is serf, no one is slave. All are free and more than free; all are citizens and more than citizens; all are kings.

That is the ideal republic; and in my humble opinion, gentlemen, if we fall away from that ideal of the Republic, the Republic is in danger. [Applause.]

CHINESE EXCLUSION AND CONTRACT LABOR.

The Hawaiian Islands are now occupied by the following races and nationalities:

Hawaiians and mixed blood	39,000
Japanese	25,000
Chinese	21,000
Portuguese	15,000
Americans	4,000
Germans and other Europeans	2,000
Polynesians and miscellaneous	1,250

About 700 Chinese have been naturalized into the Hawaiian republic, and many Chinese and Japanese are there under government permits and labor contracts, under which they are bound to work for a term of years and to return to their own countries at the end of their term of service.

This bill provides (section 5) "that except as herein otherwise provided the Constitution and all laws of the United States locally applicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States," and thereby simply reenacts section 1891 of existing law, with the specified exceptions of sections 1850 and 1890. This puts the Chinese-exclusion law and alien contract-labor law immediately in force in the Territory of Hawaii whenever this bill becomes a law. At present, and pending the passage of this bill, the joint resolution of annexation provides that there shall be no further immigration of Chinese into Hawaii except as allowed by the laws of the United States, and that no Chinese, by virtue of anything contained in the joint resolution of annexation, shall come to the United States from Hawaii.

Americans, although in a small minority, practically dominate the governmental, financial, and commercial affairs of the islands. The Chinese and Japanese possess no political power.

The Portuguese are largely immigrants or descendants from immigrants from the islands and colonies of Portugal in the Atlantic and are not closely allied in sentiment to their native country.

The public-school system makes the study of the English language compulsory. There are 132 public and 60 private schools, and education is compulsory and free as to all public schools. American text-books are used in the schools. The language of business in English and the decisions of American courts prevail as precedents.

LEGISLATIVE POWER.

1. The legislative power of the Territory of Hawaii is carefully guarded by this bill. The Territorial legislature is given power to legislate on "all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, locally applicable." The scope of the power of the Hawaiian legislature is limited, so that special and exclusive privileges, immunities, or franchises may not be granted to any corporation, association, or individual without approval of Congress.

2. Nor shall the Hawaiian legislature grant private charters, but it may pass general acts permitting incorporation for certain specific purposes.

3. Nor may it appropriate money for sectarian, denominational, or private schools, nor for any schools except schools exclusively under governmental control.

4. Nor may the government, or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, take stock in or lend its credit to any incorporated company.

5. Nor may the legislature contract any debt on behalf of the Territory or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, except to pay interest on existing indebtedness, suppress insurrection or provide for the common defense, and except that the legislature may authorize loans by the Territory or any such subdivision thereof for the creation of penal, charitable, and educational institutions, and for public buildings, wharves, harbors, and other public improvements.

The total indebtedness, however, that may be incurred in any one year by the Territory, or any such subdivision thereof, is limited to 1 per cent of the taxable property of the Territory or any such subdivision as shown by the last general assessment; and the total indebtedness of the Territory at any one time shall not exceed 7 per cent of assessed valuation; nor shall the total indebtedness of any such subdivision of the Territory at any one time exceed 3 per cent of any such assessed valuation. However, the Government is not prevented from refunding existing indebtedness at any time.

6. No loans are to be made upon the public domain, and no bonds or other instruments of indebtedness are to be issued unless redeemable in five years and payable in fifteen years.

7. No retrospective laws are to be passed.

8. No legislative divorces can be granted.

The legislature is expressly given power to create county, town, and city municipalities and to provide for the government thereof.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Of the various offices, officers, and boards which this bill provides for, that of commissioner of public lands has attracted most attention.

This bill provides that—

> The laws of Hawaii relating to public lands, the settlement of boundaries, and the issuance of patents on land-commission awards, except as changed by this act, shall continue in force until Congress shall otherwise provide.

The public-land system of the Hawaiian Islands has been evolved out of local conditions and is peculiar to them. After careful consideration it has not been thought advisable to attempt to extend our public-land system as it exists here, so as to include Hawaii. In some respects such extension would be absolutely impossible. Under the constitutional provision in that behalf Congress has from time to time made laws "respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

At the outset the original thirteen States contained 218,721,280 acres; by the definitive treaty of peace with Great Britain in 1783 our territorial extent was increased to 531,200,000 acres; in 1803, by the Louisiana purchase, we obtained 756,961,280 acres; by the Florida cession in 1819 we obtained a further tract of 37,931,520 acres; by the annexation of Texas in 1845 we obtained 175,587,840 acres; in 1850 we purchased of Mexico 334,443,520 acres; in 1850 the Federal Government bought of Texas 65,130,880 acres; in 1853 we bought of Mexico 29,142,400 acres; in 1867 we bought of Russia Alaska, containing 369,529,600 acres, and by the joint resolution of 1898 we annexed Hawaii, containing in all 4,313,600 acres, of which 1,720,055 acres are public domain.

The greater portion of lands which we have so acquired were unoccupied except by Indian tribes, whose Indian titles have been extinguished. In many cases, also, we acquired these lands subject to previous grants, which were protected by treaty stipulations in the treaty of acquisition.

Up to 1812 the Secretary of the Treasury had supervision of the sale of public lands; then the Land Office was established as a separate Bureau of the Treasury Department, and in 1846 the Interior Department was organized and the Land Office was transferred to that Department. The Land Office is charged with the survey and disposal of the public lands.

The system of survey is the rectangular system established in 1785 by a Congressional committee, of which Jefferson was chairman, by which base lines and meridian lines are first determined and townships 6 miles square are laid out and numbered north and south from base lines and ranges are laid out and numbered east and west from meridian lines.

Obviously, our laws as to public lands are not applicable to Hawaii. Our lines of survey have generally been run over new country, like lines upon clean paper. Then settlers have filled up the lines. The exceptions to this have not been difficult to deal with.

HAWAIIAN LANDS.

In Hawaii, however, the lands are already occupied, and, from the very nature of the soil and the character of the inhabitants, are cut up into holdings of all shapes and sizes, the shape being generally that of an irregular triangle, with its base on the coast line and its apex toward the center of the island.

There has already been established there a system of survey adapted to the natural formation and contour of the islands. For illustration, all the islands rise from the sea level, in some parts abruptly and in some parts gradually, to a central elevation, and for purposes of cultivation the land is naturally divided into lowland, fitted for the growth of taro and rice; next above this is sugar land, next coffee land, and then comes grazing and timber land.

It is obvious that it would be impossible to overlay this system which has been long in practice and under which the land is occupied with an arbitrary rectangular system.

As to the history and manner of disposal of public lands in Hawaii:

1. Up to 1846 all the lands of the Hawaiian Islands belonged in legal contemplation to the king.

The chiefs and the people, under a feudel system closely resembling the old English feudel system, held their respective parcels by rendering service or payment of rent.

2. In 1846 King Kamehameha III granted: (1) To his chiefs and people certain portions; (2) for government purposes certain portions, (3) and reserved the remainder.

3. By an act, June 7, 1848, the legislature accepted the king's grant and confirmed to the king, his heirs and successors, certain described lands which were thenceforth known as crown lands.

Under an act organizing executive departments, a land commission was provided whose duty it was to receive and pass upon the claims of occupants and lands to their respective holdings in that portion of the land set apart for the chiefs and people. This commission heard the testimony of claimants, caused surveys to be made, and issued to the occupants entitled thereto certificates called "Land commission awards." These awards established the right of the grantee to the possession of the land and entitled him upon payment of one-fourth of the value of the bare land to receive a royal patent. These awards and patents issued pursuant thereto are the source of all title to all lands not public lands or crown lands.

By an act of July 9, 1850, one-twentieth of all public lands are set apart for the support of schools. These lands are patented to a board of education, which was empowered to sell and lease. Part of these lands is used for sites for school buildings, part is leased, and part has been sold.

In 1881 a homestead law on a small scale was provided for but was little used, only 256 patents having been issued.

The republic came in in 1894, and the legislature of that year passed "the land act of 1895." By this act the crown lands were treated as having vested in the republic and are now embraced as public lands. The public lands were placed under the control of a board of commissioners, composed of the secretary of the interior and two persons appointed by the governor, and by this bill they pass under the control of a commissioner of public lands.

The islands are divided into six land districts, with a subagent of public lands and ranges for each.

The public lands are divided as follows:

- Hawaiian public lands.
  - 1. Agricultural lands.
    - First class... Land suitable for fruit, coffee, sugar, and other perennial crops, with or without irrigation.
    - Second class. Land suitable for cultivation of annual crops only.
    - Third class... Wet lands, such as taro and rice lands.
  - 2. Pastoral lands.
    - First class... Land not in description of agricultural lands, but capable of supporting live stock the year through.
    - Second class. Land capable of supporting live stock only part of the year, or otherwise inferior to first-class.
  - 3. Pastoral agricultural lands. Part pasturage and part agricultural.
  - 4. Forest lands. Producing forest trees, but unsuitable for cultivation.
  - 5. Waste lands.

The commissioners are authorized to dispose of these lands in the following manner:

1. At public auction for cash in parcels not exceeding 1,000 acres.
2. At public auction, part credit, in parcels not exceeding 600 acres.
3. Without auction sale, in exchange for private lands or by way of compromise.
4. By lease at public auction for not more than twenty-one years.
5. Homestead leases.
6. Right of purchase leases.
7. Cash freeholds.

By this bill the "commissioner of public lands" takes the place of the board of commissioners, but the laws relating to public lands, the settlement of boundaries, and the issuance of patents on land commission awards continue in force until Congress shall provide otherwise.

This bill provides for an internal-revenue district comprising the whole Territory, a customs district comprising the whole Territory, with four ports of entry, and for a Delegate to Congress.

To the proposition that the government proposed by this bill will be taken as a precedent and example for that of Puerto Rico and the Philippines, I answer that each territory—using the word territory now as meaning only land and the people thereon—each territory must be treated according to its own needs and conditions.

Hawaii has shown isself capable of establishing and maintaining a stable government. Its laws are copied from our laws; its jurisprudence runs back to the same source from which we derive ours, and is enriched and illuminated by the decisions of American courts. Its people are familiar with our institutions and our language.

On the island of Hawaii there stands a monument where Captain Cook, the discoverer of these islands, was killed by the natives in 1778. He was followed by Vancouver. Then came the missionaries and civilization.

Philosophers have philosophized and theorists have theorized as to whether man may not be happier in a state of nature than under the restrictions as well as liberties of civilization. But in practice no weak or undeveloped race has ever appeared to have any rights of inertia or retrogression which stronger nations were bound to respect.

The world moves on toward "the parliament of man and the federation of the world," sometimes by compulsion, sometimes by spontaneous advances.

As to Hawaii, she comes to us without purchase and without price; without bloodshed, and even without solicitation, and has voluntarily merged herself into the onward march of the nation which is the standard bearer of the noblest ideals which ever animated any nation since time began.

Mr. MCALEER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to give a stable civil government to the Hawaiian Islands, and is entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii." Owing to the fact that nearly all my time for the past few weeks has been taken up by the investigation of the Idaho mining troubles now pending before the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, I frankly confess that I have not had an opportunity to give this bill the study and the attention the importance of the subject under consideration deserves. From a superficial reading of the report submitted by the committee, and from a hasty analysis of the provisions of the bill, I believe, however, I can safely say that the bill now before the House is far from perfect and can be, and ought to be, materially improved by amendment.

I am informed that a number of amendments will be offered, and I indulge the hope that before the bill becomes a law the objectionable features it now contains will be eliminated and that the bill will be as nearly perfect as we can make it at the present time. These amendments should be adopted; and if they are, I trust this bill will pass.

Ever since the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States I have favored granting to our fellow-citizens there the very best form of Territorial government it is possible for Congress to devise. They deserve it; they are entitled to it; and Congress should have vouchsafed them this important right long ere this. I favored and voted for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, and I gave my reasons for doing so at that time. I am now, and always have been, anxious to give the people there the best and the most liberal kind of Territorial government.

There is imperative need of early enactment of an organic act for the government of the Territory of Hawaii.

The joint resolution of July 7, 1898, providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, declares that the Hawaiian municipal laws not contrary to the United States Constitution or inconsistent with the terms of that resolution remain in force until Congress enact laws. It was undoubtedly expected then that a Territorial act would soon be passed, and a bill was introduced in each House of the Fifty-fifth Congress. But other matters of great national importance so occupied the time and attention of Congress that the bill was not passed.

Meanwhile it has become apparent that there is much doubt of the extent of the power granted to the local government of Hawaii by the provisions of the joint resolution, and in many important respects it has created something like an interregnum.

Many doubtful questions of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction have arisen, as well as of criminal procedure, rendering it uncertain whether there is now any tribunal for the decision of important questions affecting property and any existing method by which criminals may be indicted or legal juries impaneled for their trial.

In anticipation of Congressional action, the election to fill vacancies in the Hawaiian senate was not held last year, and there is, therefore, no legislative power for appropriating money for public purposes.

There is also grave doubt concerning the power of the Hawaiian government to grant franchises for industrial and commercial enterprises, or for railways which have been projected, and the Attorney-General of the United States has decided that the Hawaiian government has no power to grant or lease any of the public lands for homesteads or for any purpose, notwithstanding the fact that the treaty of annexation declared that the proceeds and revenues of such lands should be devoted to the benefit of the inhabitants of Hawaii.

In many respects the business affairs of the Territory are brought to a standstill. Many Americans have bought government land since annexation, on which they have built residences and planted crops, but their land titles are now in dispute and can not be settled until the passage of this bill.

Meanwhile Americans can not settle in Hawaii on homesteads or land bought from the government, and a very desirable class of citizens is thereby shut out of this new Territory. The local government is unable even to make public roads over any part of the public domain of Hawaii, or carry out plans based on legislation prior to annexation for widening and straightening the streets of Honolulu.

The presence in that city of the bubonic plague is calling for drastic measures by the Hawaiian authorities, involving the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. In order to provide for these expenditures, and to compensate the owners of buildings which have been burned in the effort to suppress the pestilence, it is proper and just that a Territorial legislature be provided by Congress with no unnecessary delay.

Since the adoption of the resolution of annexation large numbers of Japanese contract laborers have been brought into the islands, and delay in extending the laws of the United States to them will be taken advantage of to increase the number.

This bill proposes a Territorial government for the Hawaiian Islands similar to that of the later Territories of the United States—a governor, a secretary, both appointed by the President; a treasurer, attorney-general, commissioner of public lands, commissioner of agriculture and forestry, superintendent of public works, superintendent of public instruction, auditor and deputy auditor, surveyor, and high sheriff, appointed by the governor.

A legislature is provided, consisting of a senate and house of representatives, elected by the people. The Territory is to be represented by a Delegate in Congress. The Territory is made a judicial district of the United States, with a district court having, in addition, the jurisdiction of circuit courts, with a district judge, district attorney, and a marshal of the United States, appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate of the United States.

The judicial power of the Territory is vested in a supreme court and in inferior courts to be established by the legislature. The laws of the United States locally applicable are extended over the new Territory, and the laws of Hawaii not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States are continued in force. The Territory is made a customs and revenue district and becomes subject to the tariff laws of the United States.

It needs no argument, it seems to me, to convince that if it be possible to give to the Hawaiian Islands a government like that of the United States Territories—a government which has met the approval of Congress and the American people since the Constitution was adopted and has proved itself adapted to the needs of a free and progressive people—it is desirable to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I am aware that there are many difficult problems to be solved regarding this legislation and that it will necessarily contain many errors and omissions; but, sir, I feel confident the citizens of the Hawaiian Islands will be able ultimately to solve the problems, and whatever defects this bill contains will soon be discovered when the law goes into operation, and time and experience and subsequent legislation will correct and remedy them. The all-important thing for us to do now, and do promptly, is to give the people of the Hawaiian Islands Territorial government, and the best, the freest, and the most liberal Territorial government the combined wisdom and judgment of Congress can devise. I am in favor of home rule and absolute local self-government for our Territories.

And, sir, I desire to say in this connection that what we do for the people of the Territory of Hawaii we should also do for the people of the Territory of Puerto Rico. There should be no selfish distinction—no sordid discrimination. A citizen of Hawaii is a citizen of the United States and a citizen of Puerto Rico is a citizen of the United States just as much as a citizen of the District of Columbia or a citizen of the State of New York; they are all citizens of the great Republic, free and independent, and under the dome of the Union sky, protected by the flag of our country, they are entitled to all the rights, to all the benefits, to all the privileges, and to all the immunities of the Federal Constitution. This is our plain duty, the imperative mandate of the hour, and for anyone or any party to seriously contend to the contrary is preposterous and in the end will be as unwise as it is unjust, as inhuman as it is indefensible, and as un-American as it is unconstitutional.

Any departure, in my judgment, by Congress from the well-settled, the successful, the time-honored, and the constitutional policy of the Republic regarding the government of our territorial possessions will be fraught with much danger to our free institutions and will be a step forward in the contemplated programme of imperialism. I am opposed to any plan or any policy repugnant to or in any way antagonistic to the fundamental principles of our national existence. The Constitution is my guide, and the Declaration of Independence the lamp that illumines my path. I am opposed to injustice, to militarism, to imperialism, and to industrial slavery here or anywhere else, at home or in our islands of the sea; and wherever our flag floats, in the Pacific or in the Atlantic, in the States or in the Territories, I want the Constitution to be there, guaranteeing to every human being liberty, equality, justice, and every right of an American citizen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, this is all I desire to say at this time regarding the provisions of this bill. I shall vote for the amendments, and if they be adopted, I shall vote for this bill. But in connection with my remarks on this matter and some remarks I made a short time ago I wish to print in the RECORD some data in relation thereto that may be of interest to some of the thinking people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some data in connection with his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HON. W. J. BRYAN ON IMPERIALISM—JEFFERSON VS. IMPERIALISM.

The advocates of imperialism have sought to support their position by appealing to the authority of Jefferson. Of all the statesmen who have ever lived Jefferson was the one most hostile to the doctrines embodied in the demand for a European colonial policy.

Imperialism as it now presents itself embraces four distinct propositions:

1. That the acquisition of territory by conquest is right.
2. That the acquisition of remote territory is desirable.
3. That the doctrine that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed is unsound.
4. That people can be wisely governed by aliens.

To all these propositions Jefferson was emphatically opposed. In a letter to William Short, written in 1791, he said:

"If there be one principle more deeply written than any other in the mind of every American, it is that we should have nothing to do with conquest."

Could he be more explicit? Here we have a clear and strong denunciation of the doctrine that territory should be acquired by force. If it is said that we have outgrown the ideas of the fathers, it may be observed that the doctrine laid down by Jefferson was reiterated only a few years ago by no less a Republican than James G. Blaine. All remember the enthusiasm with which he entered into the work of bringing the republics of North and South America into close and cordial relations. Some, however, may have forgotten the resolutions introduced by him at the conference held in 1890, and approved by the commissioners present. They are as follows:

"First. That the principle of conquest shall not during the continuance of the treaty of arbitration be recognized as admissible under American public law.

"Second. That all cessions of territory made during the continuance of the treaty of arbitration shall be void if made under threats of war or in the presence of an armed force.

"Third. Any nation from which such cessions shall be exacted may demand that the validity of the cessions so made shall be submitted to arbitration.

"Fourth. Any renunciation of the right to arbitration made under the conditions named in the second section shall be null and void."

If the principle of conquest is right, why should it be denied a place in American public law? So objectionable is the theory of acquisition of territory by conquest that the nation which suffers such injustice can, according to the resolutions, recover by arbitration the land ceded in the presence of an armed force. So abhorrent is it that a waiver of arbitration made under such circumstances is null and void. While the resolutions were only for the consideration of the American republics, the principle therein stated can not be limited by latitude or longitude.

But this is a time of great and rapid changes, and some may even look upon Blaine's official acts as ancient history.

If so, let it be remembered that President McKinley only a year ago (December 6, 1897), in a message to Congress discussing the Cuban situation, said:

"I speak not of forcible annexation, for that is not to be thought of. That, by our code of morality, would be criminal aggression."

And yet some are now thinking of that which was then "not to be thought of." Policy may change, but does a "code of morality" change. In his recent speech at Savannah Secretary Gage, in defending the new policy of the Administration, suggested that "philanthropy and 5 per cent" may go hand in hand. Surely we know not what a day may bring forth, if in so short a time "criminal aggression" can be transformed into "philanthropy and 5 per cent." What beauty, what riches, the isles of the Pacific must possess if they can tempt our people to abandon not only the traditions of a century, but our standard of national morality! What visions of national greatness the Philippines must arouse if the very sight of them can lead our country to vie with the monarchies of the Old World in the extension of sovereignty by force.

Jefferson has been called an expansionist, but our opponents will search in vain for a single instance where he advocated the acquisition of remote territory. On the contrary, he expressly disclaimed any desire for land outside of the North American continent. That he looked forward to the annexation of Cuba is well known, but in a letter to President Monroe, dated June 23, 1823, he suggested that we should be in readiness to receive Cuba "when solicited by herself." To him Cuba was desirable only because of the island's close proximity to the United States. Thinking that some one might use the annexation of Cuba as a precedent for indefinite expansion, he said, in a letter to President Madison, dated April 27, 1809:

"It will be objected to our receiving Cuba that no limit can then be drawn to our future acquisitions," but, he added, "Cuba can be defended by us without a navy, and this develops the principle which ought to limit our views. Nothing should ever be accepted which would require a navy to defend it."

In the same letter, speaking of the possible acquisition of that island, he said:

"I would immediately erect a column on the southernmost limit of Cuba and inscribe on it a ne plus ultra as to us in that direction."

It may be argued that Jefferson was wrong in asserting that we should confine our possessions to the North American continent, but certainly no one can truthfully quote him as an authority for excursions into the Eastern Hemisphere. If he was unwilling to go farther south than Cuba, even in the Western Hemisphere, would he be likely to look with favor upon colonies in the Orient?

If the authority of Jefferson can not be invoked to support the acquisition of remote territory, much less can his great name be used to excuse a colonial policy which denies to the people the right to govern themselves. When he suggested an inscription for his monument, he did not enumerate the honors which he had received, though no American had been more highly honored; he only asked to be remembered for what he had done, and he named the writing of the Declaration of Independence as the greatest of his deeds. In that memorable document he declared it a self-evident truth that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. The defense and development of that doctrine was his special care. His writings abound with expressions showing his devotion to that doctrine and his solicitude for it.

He preached it in the enthusiasm of his youth; he reiterated it when he reached the age of maturity; he crowned it with benedictions in his old age. Who will say that, if living, he would jeopardize it to-day by engrafting upon it the doctrine of government by external force.

Upon the fourth proposition Jefferson is no less explicit. Now, when some are suggesting the wisdom of a military government for the Philippines, or a colonial system such as England administers in India, it will not be out of place to refer to the manner in which Jefferson viewed the inability of aliens to prescribe laws and administer government. In 1817 a French society was formed for the purpose of settling upon a tract of land near the Tombigbee River. Jefferson was invited to formulate laws and regulations for the society. On the 16th of January of that year he wrote from Monticello expressing his high appreciation of the confidence expressed in him, but declining to undertake the task. The reasons he gave are well worth considering at this time. After wishing them great happiness in their undertaking, he said:

"The laws, however, which must effect this must flow from their own habits, their own feelings, and the resources of their own minds. No stranger to these could possibly propose regulations adapted to them. Every people have their own particular habits, ways of thinking, manners, etc., which have grown up with them from their infancy, are become a part of their nature, and to which the regulations which are to make them happy must be accommodated. No member of a foreign country can have a sufficient sympathy with these. The institutions of Lycurgus, for example, would not have suited Athens, nor those of Solon, Lacedæmon. The organizations of Locke were impracticable for Carolina, and those of Rosseau for Poland. Turning inwardly on myself from these eminent illustrations of the truth of my observation, I feel all the presumption it would manifest should I undertake to do what this respectable society is alone qualified to do suitably for itself."

The alien may possess greater intelligence and greater strength, but he lacks the sympathy for, and the identification with, the people. We have only to recall the grievances enumerated in the Declaration of Independence to learn how an ocean may dilute justice and how the cry of the oppressed can be silenced by distance. And yet the inhabitants of the colonies were the descendants of Englishmen—blood of their blood and bone of their bone. Shall we be more considerate of subjects farther away from us, and differing from us in color, race, and tongue, than the English were of their own offspring?

Modest Jefferson! He had been governor, ambassador to France, Vice-President, and President; he was ripe in experience and crowned with honors; but this modern lawgiver, this immortal genius, hesitated to suggest laws for a people with whose habits, customs, and methods of thought he was unfamiliar. And yet the imperialists of to-day, intoxicated by a taste of blood, are rash enough to enter upon the government of the Filipinos, confident of the nation's ability to compel obedience, even if it can not earn gratitude or win affection. Plutarch said that men entertained three sentiments concerning the ancient gods: They feared them for their strength, admired them for their wisdom, and loved them for their justice. Jefferson taught the doctrine that governments should win the love of men. What shall be the ambition of our nation; to be loved because it is just or to be feared because it is strong?

[From Buffalo Times, March 27, 1900.]

THE UNPROTECTED NORTHERN FRONTIER.

The Times's editorial on the Sulzer resolution of inquiry was timely and important. It touched a subject that can not be much longer ignored. Our Canadian border has not received the attention that its importance demands. It is defended by one little insignificant steamer, the Michigan, which is the only guardian of our vast and varied commerce. Along the shores of these lakes are located the largest cities of the country outside the great metropolis. In these cities are located vast industries, palatial private residences, magnificent public buildings, and untold wealth.

The rapid growth of the lake commerce and its present stupendous proportions constitute one of the wonders of American commercial history. Some idea of the lake traffic may be formed from the statement that the aggregate entrances and clearances in 1898 for Buffalo alone numbered 11,265. For the entire Great Lakes the figures are far in excess of those for New York and of the entire seaboard of the United States. The tonnage has more than doubled itself in the last ten years. Some 75,000 miles of railway terminate on these lakes, and millions of tons of freight are moved annually. The tonnage passing Detroit River during the two hundred and thirty-four days of navigation is more than the entrances and clearances of all the seaports of the United States. It is more than the combined foreign and coastwise shipping of Liverpool and London. More business is done on this body of water than passes through the great Suez Canal. In our Great Lakes is one-half of the fresh water of the world.

Comparisons give a clearer idea of the enormous traffic than mere figures can. The damage that might be inflicted by a single Alabama or Shenandoah is incalculable.

And to protect this vast commerce there is only the Michigan, which has been aptly characterized the "Noah's Ark of the Navy." She is a side-wheeler and is classed as a fourth-rate cruiser. Her speed is about 11 knots an hour, less than half that of some of our salt-water cruisers. She is rated at 582 tons and has a length of 163 feet and a draft of 9 feet. She has been on the lakes since 1843, and is about as up to-date as the frigate Constitution. She has a main battery of four 30-pound breech-loading rifles, a secondary battery of three 3-inch Hotchkiss rapid-fire guns, and a couple of Gatlings. Her regular crew consists of about 100 officers and seamen, and a few marines. She is almost as medieval and about as effective as the old stone fort on Mackinac Island would be in a sparring match with modern harbor fortifications.

The treaty of 1817 between the United States and Great Britain is responsible for this state of affairs. It provides that but a single armed vessel shall be maintained by either Government upon the Great Lakes.

The United States Government has rigidly adhered not only to the letter but to the spirit of this treaty. Great Britain, however, has not been so scrupulous in this respect.

Attention has frequently been called to the revenue cutters built by the Canadian Government. They are denominated "revenue cutters," but compared with the old-fashioned armed vessels upon the lakes they are to all intents and purposes armed cruisers. The Constance and others of a like character, ostensibly designed for the purpose of preventing smuggling on the Lower St. Lawrence and to protect the fisheries of Georgian Bay and Nova Scotia, are said to be quite within the limits of the treaty. But they would, nevertheless, prove formidable foes to unarmed merchant vessels. There is nothing like them in the service of the United States Government. Should hostilities break out between this country and England these innocent-looking "revenue cutters" would soon become formidable instruments of destruction, and the commerce of the lakes would be at their mercy long before our Government could construct anything that would stand a ghost of a chance against them.

The land defenses are in equally as bad a condition. Beyond a little patching done at Fort Niagara, no attempt has been made to make them better. They consist of five antiquated forts. They were built many years ago for the protection of certain important strategic and commercial points on Lakes Ontario and Erie, at the mouth of the Detroit River, and by the outlet of Lake Champlain. Never completed, they are to-day useless.

Fort Ontario, which was commenced in 1839, stands on the south side of the lake, from which it takes its name, and is at the mouth of the Oswego River. It is a bastioned work, pentagonal in shape, with one front facing the lake, one the river, and three sides facing the land. It has no armament and no preparations for any except in the flank casemates. It can secure Oswego against bombardment neither from the lake nor land.

Fort Niagara was also begun in 1839 and is built at the mouth of the Niagara River, on the south side of Lake Ontario, and at a distance of 40 miles east of its western extremity. It is an irregular work, having one strong land front running nearly north and south from Lake Ontario at its northern extremity nearly to Niagara River at its southern. It contains two masonry blockhouses, built by the French about the year 1757, and other buildings commenced by the French and finished by the English after it was captured during the French and Indian war. The work has no armament nor gun platforms and is garrisoned by companies living in quarters outside the fort.

Fort Porter, as all Buffalonians know, is a picturesque pile, which is more useful to artists than for purposes of defense. It has been officially pronounced useless for defense, and the authorities of this city were authorized by act of Congress to improve and beautify the grounds in connection with the public park laid out on lands adjoining. Fort Porter was begun in 1842. It consists of a square stone tower, which was nearly destroyed by fire many years ago. It is also watched by a company living outside the fort.

Fort Wayne is situated on the west bank of the Detroit River, which it commands. It is on a high, sandy bluff. It was commenced in 1841 and is a square bastioned work with a detached parapet on the curtains and faces an unfinished demilune on the water, and unfinished water batteries upon the up and down stream sides. Its only armament consists of guns of antiquated patterns, many of which are dismounted. It also has eight 12-pound brass guns, which are principally used at reveille, retreat, and on the Fourth of July. An attempt was begun in 1863 to reconstruct the fort, but after dragging its slow length along for seven years the work was discontinued.

About 450 miles from Detroit and commanding the entrance to Lake Superior stands Fort Mackinac, on the island of that name, which is a strong position, but consists only of old palisades and wooden houses of Indian days.

Fort Montgomery, at Rouse Point, is a casemated work which was begun in 1841. It occupies a point of great importance and theoretically commands the entrance to Lake Champlain from the Richelieu or St. John River. If armed with suitable guns, it might bar the passage of a hostile squadron up the Lakes, but its main use would be as a fortified base and storehouse for an invading army moving on the Champlain line of operations across the Canadian border.

Now, how is Canada situated? For many miles from the mouth of the St. Lawrence both banks are Canadian soil. England possesses an enormous fleet of gunboats and torpedo boats that could easily get into the lakes and attack the defenseless points; for, of course, in case of war the treaty of 1817 would be torn into thousands of pieces. The Welland Canal, through which any vessel not drawing more than 14 feet can pass, was constructed around the falls as much from a strategic as a commercial point of view, for English statesmen saw that by means of it they would at one blow sweep American commerce off the lakes.

We have no canal going around the falls. The Welland Canal practically opens the whole chain of lakes to English seagoing ships.

Such is the condition of affairs existing to-day on our northeastern border. We are as dilatory and negligent respecting our northwestern border. While the Government of the United States has been asleep, England has been wide awake to the future possibilities and contingencies, and in time of peace has been getting in shape for war.

EVERETT SPRING.

THE ALLEGED EUROPEAN COALITION AGAINST THE UNITED STATES DURING THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

[By T. St. John Gaffney.]

During the late war and since its close dispatches regarding England's attitude toward the United States have been constantly appearing in a large number of British and American newspapers. These dispatches were sent out with the view of creating the impression that France, Germany, and Russia were ready to intervene in the interest of Spain, and were held in check only by the knowledge that England would array herself on our side in the event of such a contingency.

Acting on the theory that a lie, if told often enough, will in the end do duty for the truth, a small but noisy group of Americans are constantly referring to these statements in support of their contention that out of pure gratitude we should support England's position in South Africa, become her ally, and relieve the tension of her present isolated situation in Europe.

A great deal of maudlin sentimentality has been uttered since the beginning of this pro-British campaign in the United States, which has been anything but flattering to our national pride.

What has been the object, I ask, of this subserviency to a European power which has been always our consistent and untiring enemy? Why should American citizens be so anxious to credit England with a part in our victories during the late war and attribute to her moral support the achievements of our Army and Navy? How insufferably truckling in spirit appear citizens who make use of a statement, branded time and again by the highest authorities as a falsehood, which has the effect of exhibiting their country before the world as a protected weakling.

It is my intention in this article to show that this so called coalition was not of continental but of English manufacture; that it found its origin in papers notoriously under the control of the British foreign office, for the purpose of working an unscrupulous imposture upon the credulity of the American people.

This fact I will prove by the unanimous voice of the ambassadors of the powers directly concerned, by the statement of our Secretary of State, John Hay, and also by the reiterated statements of our own ambassadors accredited at Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg. I will show that at no time during the war with Spain did England decline to join the other powers in a move for intervention. I will show that no such action on the part of Great Britain ever took place, and that the impeachment of the continued friendliness of the other powers is due to a carefully planned conspiracy of the pro-English news agencies. At no time was there a purpose on the part of the great powers to interpose against the United States, so that there was never an occasion for such a demonstration of English friendship as has been so assiduously presented. The story, although very widely circulated and generally accepted as a fact, is nothing less than a pure fabrication, and for the truth of history, as well as for the removal of the groundless reflection upon the attitude of the European powers, it should no longer be accepted as a part of the records of the war.

The ambassadors and the other high authorities I quote do not give merely their personal opinions, but the facts learned during their visits to Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

I feel that it is but simple justice to these powers that the consistent friendship they maintained to the United States throughout every period of the war, and continue to maintain toward this Government, should not be obscured by the fiction as to the exceptional friendship of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty.

Upon the outbreak of the late war England set to work the springs of her journalistic machinery in the European capitals to prejudice continental opinion against the United States. At the same time, in order to fan the flame of whatever disaffection existed toward America, she insidiously spread rumors of an understanding between Washington and London.

The leading correspondents at the European capitals are Englishmen, and most of the news passes through London to America. The correspondents were instructed to carefully select for transmission here the utterances of the most rabid anti-American newspapers, papers which have always had the reputation of being suspiciously close to the English foreign office. This journalistic campaign is an old trick of John Bull, and has been frequently worked before, but in no case so flagrantly or so successfully as during the Hispano-American war.

Every ridiculous canard cabled from London purporting to represent continental opinion was published here with startling headlines, while the views of reputable newspapers were hidden away in the most obscure corner. Our papers seem to have fallen into the trap so cleverly laid, and joined with eagerness in the British campaign of palaver, buncombe, and hypocrisy.

The Literary Digest, an impartial review of the newspapers of the world, said, upon this point, during the early stages of the war:

"Owing to the want of a direct cable, the news from America to Germany, and vice versa, passes through English hands, and the Germans accuse the British of making unfair use of this advantage."

This fraud and cheat upon the public mind early showed its fruit, because continental criticisms of the United States increased in direct ratio to the wave of manufactured English emotion in our behalf.

Responsible papers in Germany and France were not inimical to the United States. During the second month of the war cable dispatches appeared in the New York Herald which seemed to indicate that England's game was being seen through. I quote from an editorial in that paper, which was forced to admit that the origin of continental hostility to America was mainly attributed to the British agencies. The Herald says:

"The fact is noted that England is accused of having incited the present unpleasant feeling between France and the United States, and it is curiously significant that the German press—as noted in a special cable dispatch from Berlin to the Herald this morning—similarly charges the correspondent of the English newspapers with inciting antipathy between Germany and the United States."

The special Berlin correspondent of the New York Journal says:

"Diplomats here emphatically express their irritation over the persistent reports, emanating from English sources, of strained German-American relations."

Mme. MacGahan, the well-known Russian correspondent, says:

"In this present instance the Vienna agencies are obviously working in concert with similar agencies in London with a view to convincing the United States that they have not a friend on earth save England. But what use has the United States of any body's friendship in the present emergency?"

Finally, let me say that the correspondents of London papers here continually cabled to the Continent every article hostile to Russia, France, and Germany for the purpose of arousing irritation against us in those countries. When we recall the insulting and abusive attitude of a large element of the American press against these powers during the Spanish war we should not wonder that there is a bitter feeling in some parts of Europe against us. The marvel is that it is not stronger.

THE ATTITUDE OF FRANCE.

France, it was said, assumed the initiative looking for a concerted action of the powers, and because Spain placed her interests and subjects under the protection of the diplomatic and consular agents of that Government, additional color seemed to be lent to the fiction.

But what was the attitude of the late lamented President, of M. Cambon, the Franch ambassador to this country, and M. Hanotaux, the then minister of foreign affairs, during the period of these alleged continental negotiations? We have the authority of our ambassador, Gen. Horace Porter, in interviews, public addresses, and communications to this Government, that France adhered to the strict line of neutrality and that reports to the contrary were malicious fabrications. In regard to the alleged coalition, M. Cambon and M. Hanotaux, as well as General Porter, denied in the most unqualified terms any knowledge of such a proceeding. President McKinley has been outspoken in his commendation of M. Cambon for the tact, delicacy, and wisdom with which he handled the difficult negotiations during the war, and leading up to the signing of the protocol.

Upon his return from the preliminary meeting of the Venezuelan arbitration committee in Paris, Mr. Justice Brewer was interviewed.

"From the public men I have met in France," he said, "and from others, I have heard nothing but the most cordial feeling expressed toward the United States. So far as I have been able to judge from my visit the French are quite as friendly toward the United States as the English."

Le Clair, one of the chief journals in Paris, discussing England's relations with American affairs, and the unfriendly attitude of the United States toward Germany, throws the responsibility on the English press saying:

"We know the experience of the London papers and postmasters in this kind of work and can not forget that in the beginning of the Hispano-American war we also were the victims of the misleading information of these sheets, whose lies and calumnies almost succeeded in deceiving the American public opinion. At the present moment Germany is the victim of British journalism, which ably seconds the foreign office's efforts to embroil the United States with European powers for the purpose of associating more closely America and England."

The aftermath of this propaganda of slander and deception is seen by the views given in the Herald by a French diplomat. The New York Herald says, under date of January 16:

"A distinguished French diplomat, who has given careful study to the history and political economy of the United States, this morning gave his explanation of the French state of mind on the subject.

"If France were convinced," he said, "that the United States had an independent policy of its own, it would applaud; but the French see in America only a docile pupil of Great Britain. We should like to see the seas divided, not united, under the Anglo-Saxon flags against the world; and that is why thoughtful Frenchmen regret that the United States should quit its isolation of the days of Washington."

THE ATTITUDE OF GERMANY.

Germany was the victim of the news bureaus of England for a considerable time during the war, and for that reason I shall discuss her attitude toward us at greater length.

In the memorable debate which took place upon this subject in the Reichstag Herr von Bulow, the imperial secretary of state for foreign affairs, directed attention to the relations of amity which have existed for upward of a century between Prussia and this Government.

During our Revolution Frederick the Great refused to permit the passage of the Hessians hired by George III through his dominions, and he was one of the first European sovereigns to recognize the independence of the American colonies.

He was also one of the chief promoters of the League of Neutrals, formed by the northern powers to apply pressure upon the British Government to sign the peace of 1783. During the rebellion, when Louis Napoleon tried to bring about a joint intervention on behalf of the Confederacy, Prussia and the other German States made no secret of their friendship for the United States, and German capitalists subscribed for large quantities of our bonds at a time when the people of Great Britain were lending money to the seceding States. During the Commune of 1870-71 Germany placed the lives and property of her subjects located in France under the protection of our representatives.

In addition to such proofs of amity we have 20,000,000 people of German extraction in our Republic, a far larger number than belong to the mythical Anglo-Saxon race.

During the early weeks of the war, owing to the persistent attacks inspired by British influences, appearing in a section of the American press upon the German Government, Herr von Holleben, the German ambassador, called twice upon the President and protested against the systematic impeachment of the good faith of his Government. This unusual departure in diplomatic procedure was subsequently repeated on more than one occasion during the later developments of the war, and at each visit President McKinley warmly assured Dr. Von Holleben that he and his Cabinet were perfectly satisfied with the attitude of Germany, and were not at all influenced by the irresponsible utterances of the sensational and subsidized press upon both sides of the Atlantic.

The Hon. Andrew D. White, our ambassador to the court of Emperor William, had peculiar facilities for discovering the feeling of the Kaiser's Government, and in notable speeches delivered in Leipzig and Berlin he vigorously denounced the statements appearing in certain newspapers as absolutely baseless. He was equally emphatic in his declaration that no combination, organized or individual, had been attempted by any continental government for the purpose of interfering with or neutralizing the force of the United States' position in the Hispano American war.

So bitterly were the attacks upon Germany by American newspapers and public men resented by the American colony in Munich that they held a meeting on January 24, 1899, and denounced the anti-German expressions used in the press and House of Representatives. It was decided at this meeting to draw up a protest and send it to the Government at Washington, accompanied by a declaration that no animosity against America existed in Germany.

The Neuster Nachrichten, in commenting upon this protest, expressed a deep sense of its regret that the credulity of the American people should be exploited to such an extent by the sensational press and Anglomaniacs of the United States.

The Kolnische Zeitung, in its issue of January 30, 1899, commenting upon the assertion of General Woodford that Continental Europe was ready to interfere with the plans of the United States except for England, said: "The idea that there was any European anti-American coalition is a mere figment of the imagination. Certainly Germany, France, and Russia, from the very outset of complications, resolved to maintain the strictest neutrality."

Finally we have had the debate in the Reichstag, to which I have previously alluded, in which the members of all political parties vied with one another, and with the ministers of the Government, in expressing good will and friendliness toward our Government and our country.

There is no doubt that Admiral Von Diederichs in the Philippines displayed a want of tact and an officiousness that was altogether unnecessary, but the moment the Kaiser was made aware of the situation he relieved him of his command and substituted his own brother, Prince Henry. What further reparation could the German Emperor have made?

RUSSIA'S POSITION.

And now I shall discuss the attitude of Russia.

Not once, but several times has Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, denounced the fiction of the so-called European concert. I quote from his latest interview, held at the Russian embassy, in Washington, on November 12, 1898. The ambassador, after a vigorous protest against the foreign-interference lie, which the English press and the Anglo-American alliance promoters had been using to further their scheme, continued:

"At no time was there a purpose on the part of the great powers to intervene against the United States. No appeal by Spain to limit the claims of the United States has been made to Russia or to other foreign governments.

"America needs not the friendship of England to become a great power. She is a great power. England needs the friendship of America—that is why she speaks as she does now. England wants America to help her to her schemes, and America will not let herself be used, I am sure. During your war with Spain, though the contrary has been urged, yet I know as a fact that at no time was there any purpose of the powers to check America's plans or advances upon the Philippines.

"England did not refuse to join for intervention, because I say that no one wished to intervene."

Count Cassini is corroborated by no less an authority than our ambassador at the court of the Czar during the Spanish war, the Hon. Ethan Allen Hitchcock, who at present holds a portfolio in the Cabinet of President McKinley.

In an interview had with him by a representative of the Associated Press, Mr. Hitchcock denounced emphatically the stories current since the beginning of the Hispano-American war, that Russia was a member of a coalition of continental powers which would have intervened in the dispute had not England refused to join them.

"These stories are utterly unfounded," said Mr. Hitchcock. "There has never been a single item of proof produced to substantiate them, and, on the contrary, Russia has been most friendly toward the United States and has manifested that friendship during the past years in many ways, of which my position forbids me to speak."

"In the North American Review for March there is an article from General Alger, in which the following appears: 'Two years ago, when under the not too friendly observation of some of the great powers we were discharging our duty as the guardian of liberty and humanity in the Western Hemisphere, Great Britain stood conspicuous among the nations as our friend. Nor was her cordial sympathy valueless. She remained strictly neutral, but her whole attitude toward us was so unmistakably friendly that its influence in preventing what might have occurred in the way of European intervention will never be capable of full measurement.'"

This statement from the late Secretary of War was immediately challenged by numerous members of the general public, and to correct misapprehension General Alger has been compelled to dictate a statement to the press, explaining what he meant.

"The British Government," he says, "so far as I know, never did anything actually to warrant my statement. We knew of their friendship to us by that which perhaps can not be expressed in words. It was a feeling that if any trouble should arise by reason of an appeal by Spain for the powers to aid her the British Government would not permit us to be embarrassed. I state distinctly that there was no evidence of any attitude of the sort on their part; that it was a belief. I would not say the matter was discussed in the Cabinet meetings. I am simply giving my own impressions and my firm belief. I have simply spoken for myself."

Is it any wonder that a well-known continental diplomatist should make the following observation: "Of all the goose food that has ever been distributed that of Great Britain's alleged protection of the United States against a European coalition is by far the most ridiculous."

The Hon. John W. Bookwalter, formerly governor of Ohio, a brilliant man of affairs and ideas, was in Russia during the war and was allowed to go everywhere, to see everything, and to take any number of photographs.

"The United States will commit a woeful mistake," he said, "if they fail to retain the friendship of Russia, the great world power of the future. Everywhere I found the kindest, most friendly feeling toward America, and heard everywhere expressions of satisfaction over America's success in our war with Spain. Wherever I went everything was thrown open to me simply because I was an American. I distrust the friendship of England, and advise above all the cultivation of friendship with France, Germany, and Russia."

I have reserved until now what is possibly the highest corroborative testimony I have quoted upon this subject, the testimony of a man who above all others should have been acquainted with the sinister intentions of the powers and the friendly spirit of the Government of the octogenarian sovereign of England.

I refer to an interview with Col. John Hay, our ambassador to the Court of St. James during the Spanish war and our present Secretary of State. Upon his arrival in this country the following categorical question was asked Colonel Hay, and I give both question and answer verbatim from the New York World of September 22, 1898:

"Q. You mean to state positively that there was no combined or individual attempt on the part of Germany, France, or Russia to humiliate the United States by taking sides with Spain?

"A. I certainly do. Nothing of the kind occurred."

About the same time, in the leading newspapers of America, appeared an interview with William T. Stead, the well-known British journalist, whose opportunities for diplomatic information on the Continent are well recognized.

Speaking of the alleged combination of the powers, he said: "I am afraid I shall have to prick this bubble, much as I should desire England to have assumed the position so generally attributed to her. She did not have the chance to do so, as no attempt was made by any of the powers to interfere with the United States. This fact I have learned by inquiries at the foreign offices in Paris, London, and Berlin; and men of all parties disavow the whole story."

Henry Labouchere, M. P., the editor of London Truth, and other British journalists of distinction have frequently ridiculed the story.

Against this weight of testimony nothing has been advanced by the believers in this mythical coalition of the powers but an anonymous article which appeared in a second-rate London publication called the National Review. This magazine is edited by a Captain Maxse. It is generally believed in the United States that the article was inspired, if not written, by an Englishman named A. Maurice Low, who has had some connection in Washington with English and American newspapers for some time past. Mr. Low is an avowed and militant supporter of an Anglo-American alliance and is a firm believer in the new-fangled notion that the Anglo-Saxon race must rule the world.

The proof of the pudding lies in the eating, and the best index of English opinion, private and governmental, may be found in contemporary British newspapers and magazines. Let me append a few extracts from the representative English journals during the Spanish war.

Here is fraternity from the St. James Gazette:

"If American intervention goes farther now in an aggressive, insulting attack upon the mere existence of European sovereignty over the island, our sense of justice compels us to sympathize with Spain, and a straitwaistcoat would seem to be a useful article for outside powers to provide for a country which, like Greece in the Cretan question, wanted to bite off more than it could chew without any consideration for the disturbance of other people's interests."

Here is "Hands across the sea," from the amiable Saturday Review:

"We are told that America represents the cause of civilization, humanity, progress, while Spain represents mediæval barbarism and cruelty. We should like a little better evidence of the proposition. In Cuba itself there is anarchy and devastation, but we do not know that the invasion of the island by American filibusters and carpetbaggers will constitute an improvement. * * * Wipe out both countries and their achievements to-morrow, and which of them would be mourned by civilization? Should we miss most the oil and the corn and the iron and the pigs, or the poetry of Calderon, the art of Velasquez, the immortal fiction of Cervantes? All these would be regarded as 'back numbers' in New York or Chicago, but the world will remember them: and what will it care to remember about America?"

April 28, 1898, the New York Herald had this from London:

"The trend of English sentiment toward Spain is becoming so pronounced as to be a generally recognized fact. All resident Americans, even American diplomats, are compelled to admit it. Although the Government's friendly attitude is unchanged, it is questioned whether a majority in Parliament is not now Spanish in its sympathies, although a week ago practically unanimously partisan for the United States.

"A straw indicating the direction of the wind is shown at a popular music hall in London, where nightly pictures of the American and Spanish war ships are shown by the kinetoscope. The American war ships are only moderately applauded; the Spanish most enthusiastically."

During the first week of the war the Literary Digest analyzed the situation in the following language:

"The majority of British comment is adverse, though it is admitted the Britons can not well refuse to side with us as a people speaking the same language. The Home News, London, thinks 'it must be confessed that the general sense of England is that Spain in this particular crisis is entitled to considerable sympathy. If Spain sins in misgovernment, the United States offends in its absurd pretentions to control the fortunes of the whole American continent.'"

Then follows a quotation from the St. James Gazette:

"But there are ways of doing things; there are decencies to be observed; and our American friends must permit us to point out that they have, when it was possible, done everything in the wrong way and failed to observe the decencies. They have conducted their diplomacy as they conduct their party struggles—by loud talk, by threatening, by exaggeration, by 'bluff.'"

On April 30, the day before Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet at Manila, the special correspondent of the New York World cabled his paper as follows:

[Copyright, 1898, by the Press Publishing Company, New York World.]

"LONDON, April 30.

"There is no strong sympathy with the United States here beyond a certain limited circle of advanced radicals. The bulk of feeling is hostile to the extent of desiring that the United States may find the subjugation of Cuba a tougher job than she expects.

"Certain newspapers, like the Chronicle and Daily Mail, are endeavoring to evoke friendly sentiment for America, but the bulk of even the Liberal press is decidedly tepid in its sympathy, while the Tory press is either coldly critical or actually hostile.

"Although it would eminently suit the exigencies of the present government, in view of the threatening aspect of affairs in the Far East, to countenance the idea of a rapprochement between England and the United States, the ministers have found so overwhelming the mass of feeling among their own supporters in favor of an observance of the strictest neutrality that any friendly tendency on their part has been completely arrested.

"Any observer who mixes among Englishmen representative of the different classes can not fail to be struck by the almost total absence of any spontaneous manifestation of good will toward the United States in the present contest. Whether the progress of the war will produce any change remains to be seen, but that is the actual existing state of feeling."

The New York Tribune is one of the most offensive English papers published in the United States. Yet here is its view of English feeling three weeks after the Manila victory. I quote from an article by its special correspondent in London, who is an undisguised Anglomaniac. In the Tribune of May 22, 1898, he says:

"One hostile quarter is Oxford. I have learned from a trustworthy source that only two or three of the influential educators there are in sympathy with the United States. The dons and students by an immense majority are hostile critics of American institutions, and are outspoken in their hope that Spain will administer a large measure of discipline to inflated American pride.

"Another stronghold of anti-American feeling is the West End of London. Especially is this true of the exclusive and 'smart' sets, whose prejudices and sympathies are against everything American.

"There is also a disposition, especially among merchants and lawyers, to regard America as a spoiled child, who needs the restraints of persistent snubbing and a long-deferred whipping. There is more of this feeling in England than Americans can well imagine."

The special London correspondent of the New York Sun cables his paper on the same date:

"There is no longer any doubt that Spain has obtained at least temporary financial relief and is now spending money quite freely, a large part of this being disbursed by the Spanish commission which has its headquarters in London.

"Indeed, the chief source of Spanish supplies is English, and most of the arrangements for recoaling and revictualing Cervera's fleet were made in London. Agents here have made arrangements for getting coal aboard the Spanish fleets from several points in the West Indies, and especially from a Venezuelan port. Large quantities of explosives have been shipped recently from English ports to Cadiz via French ports."

A correspondent writing from London, in the Mail and Express, at the same time, says:

"It is impossible for anybody living in the heart of London, and moving in every direction as I do, not to be aware that there is a strong popular feeling for the cause of Spain. Personally I have no belief in any intense affection between this country and the United States. All the chatter about cousinhood and brotherhood and blood is the merest cant.

"I suppose there may be about 5 to 10 per cent of the American population of English descent, and as a nation they use the English language, which they speak and spell in a most unsavory fashion; but the masses who elect Congressmen and Presidents are all of foreign extraction. Though necessarily civil to us for the moment, they are not our friends; and should they succeed in their present enterprise, we shall soon be made aware of the fact in disputes over West Indian matters and nastiness about the Alaskan boundary."

On May 25 the Associated Press cabled the following to the United States:

"LONDON, May 25.

"In the newpapers to-day there are several striking instances of anti-American feeling. While the majority of the papers allude with pleasure to the references to the Queen in yesterday's celebrations at New York and Tampa, the Morning Post has allowed to appear in its columns a violent denunciation of the United States, from the Hon. Stuart Erskine, a brother of Baron Erskine, who alludes to America's 'present immoral warfare against Spain,' and asserts that the sentiment of the country which is worth having is for Spain.

"The fund being raised by the Countess Valencia, wife of the former Spanish ambassador here, for the relief of the Spanish wounded, has received several important aristocratic additions, including gifts from Lady Clanwilliam and the Duke of Wellington, who sent $500.

"The Saturday Review pursues its attacks upon America, and the following extract will indicate the tone of its comments: 'American action unfortunately suggests the attitude of a huge and boastful bully attacking an effete but gentlemanly old roué, with whom one can not help sympathizing, especially when the bully, not content with thrashing his feeble old opponent and stripping him of his valuables, bellows out with tears and protestations that he does it unwillingly and with the highest moral purpose.'"

So bitter was the feeling at this time against our country in England that even Joseph Cowen, the radical leader, denounced us in his paper, the Newcastle Chronicle, as "brutal."

"COMMON LANGUAGE AND SAME LITERATURE."

In another article the Saturday Review says:

"It is a question of manners. We are all disgusted with those raw, vulgar, blatant Americans, who scour Europe in search of their self-respect and can not conduct a mere legal case with decency."

Here is a Scottish view:

"UNION OF HEARTS."

The Edinburgh News says: "The Yankee is thirsting for blood. He will perhaps get more of it than he bargains for before he is done with the Cuban business."

The Newcastle Chronicle admits that Spain is fighting for her own, whether she was successful in managing Cuba or not.

OUR "KITH AND KIN" IN CANADA.

In Saturday Night, Toronto, several columns are filled with effusions like the following:

"We do not care to be made to feel that only their Christianity and humanitarianism prevent the Yankee mob from making a light lunch of us. In the squares before the New York newspaper offices, where thousands read with swelling pride news of the capture of a wood scow, one felt the strength of the terrible predatory instinct of a people who worship money, conquest, and an ability to crow as the owners of the earth. I admit that I was in a state of belligerency, and little as I care for Spain and her institutions I felt a prayer rising up from my heart to the great God of war, to the Lord of battles, to Him who supervises this universe, that in time, which sets all things even, the United States may be taught a lesson which it will never forget."

I quote the following interview which appeared in the New York Tribune last October:

"PICTURES OF PRESIDENT M'KINLEY AND AMERICAN WAR SHIPS HISSED IN LONDON MUSIC HALLS.

"J. W. Snell, of Toledo, Ohio, arrived from Europe yesterday, and is staying at the Gilsey House. When seen there he said: 'There is a marked contrast between the present manner in which the English treat Americans and that in which they treated them only a short time ago. I was in London in April, 1898, after war had been declared between this country and Spain, and that England was not only unfriendly to us but also underestimated and was grossly ignorant of the strength and power of the United States was everywhere in evidence. The daily papers had, many of them, a distinctly hostile tone, and none of them a particularly friendly one. The yellow journals—for yellow journalism exists in England as well as in America—were publishing pictures representing the relative strength of the navies of the world. You know the sort, a huge ship representing Great Britain, then one considerably smaller representing France, etc. The United States came way down the list, with something that looked like a rowboat, while Spain was placed well above her. I went to a theater at this time, where they had a mutascope, or vitagraph or some other graph pictures, and there the hostility to America was marked. They showed a number of American and Spanish pictures, the first being received with chilly silence and the latter with applause; but the thing came to an end, in so far as I was concerned, when they hissed a picture of President McKinley, after wildly cheering one of the Queen Regent of Spain. That settled me and I left, but I heard afterwards that the American pictures had been withdrawn on account of their unpopularity.

"As soon as the English recovered their breath after our victories there was nothing too good for the Americans; they were blood kindred; they asked you to dinner and put you up at their clubs, and only to state in London at that time that you were an American was to insure yourself the best of good things without expense to yourself. For me, while I like the English, the contrast was too sudden, and I doubted the entire cordiality of the good-fellowship extended, when I remembered that only a short fortnight before I had sat in an English theater and heard an English audience hiss the portrait of the President of the United States of America."

While the President of the United States and our Navy were exposed to the insults and contempt of the English press and the London mob, the foremost journals of the fatherland upheld our policy; Germany's best newspapers showed scant sympathy with Spain.

To sustain the truth of this statement I refer to the files of the Frankfurter Zeitung; Weser Zeitung, Bremen; Neueste Nachrichten, Munich; Koelnische Zeitung; Berliner Tageblatt; Berliner Neueste Nachrichten, and many other newspapers of their class.

Blood is thicker than water, in the Saturday Review:

"The United States is socially sordid to the last degree; its courts and civil institutions are corrupt, and it has shown the world the depth of public depravity into which a civilization is capable of descending."

Our cousins in the country north of us spoke of us through the Hamilton Times in this appreciative spirit:

"While some Canadian papers show a disposition to play the lickspittle and try to curry favor with the organs of the bullies across the line, the war organs do not spare the feelings of Canadians in the least. Many of them openly boast that the war to capture Cuba and the Philippines is to be followed in due time by giving effect to the Monroe doctrine by seizing Canada, Jamaica, etc., a threat which quite naturally elicits notes of defiance."

The Literary Digest sums up British opinion as follows:

"Is England with us? That part of the British press which has proven itself most influential during the past few years certainly is not. Our sympathizers are the papers which promised to aid Armenia and backed Greece. The Daily Chronicle, Leader, Manchester Guardian, Advertiser, etc. Government organs like the Standard, sit on the fence. Confirmed Conservatives, such as the St. James Gazette, side openly with Spain. Journals which are compared by continental papers to our American 'Know-Nothing' press abuse us in the most unreserved manner, such, for instance, as the Saturday Review."

The Associated Press sent from London April 29, 1898, this:

"Individual opinion and the sympathies of a large majority of the British are undoubtedly anti-American. This is evident to everyone having any intercourse with the people."

These are samples only. The British papers even after Dewey's victory, as I have shown by quotations, teemed with sneers and abuse of America. It was only after the results of the war began to dawn on the brain of Britain and the colossus of the West began to loom up big and serene that the Government of England woke to the necessity of getting in out of the rain and of capturing America for an ally. Then began the propaganda of falsehood and imposture, the use of false telegrams, the fabrication of bogus conspiracies, the manufacture of a tender and effusive affection for the new, strong world power. Every British agency went to work with a will; banking and stock exchange agencies toiled nobly; the cables were heavy with taffy from London and laden with fabricated hatreds from Europe. Evidently England imagined that the ears of Americans were longer than their memories. She needs us now; she needs anybody she can get; let us be wise as strong and simply say, "John, your fraternity is beautiful and does you credit, but this is our busy day; we have troubles of our own; we are not in any alliance mood this week."

A brief time ago an article appeared in the New York Sun which intelligently and truthfully set forth our relations and those of Russia in the civilization and development of our respective hemispheres. If of late our foreign policy is viewed with suspicion in Russia, Germany, and France, it is the result of the belief prevailing in these countries that our international relations are now conducted under the direction and in the interest of England. I commend this extract from the Sun to those persons, whether in the Government or outside of it, to whose fulsome ebullitions and irresponsible speeches we may charge a large proportion of the distrust in which our Government is held upon the Continent to-day:

"The Russians and Americans have now behind them three generations of effort substantially identical in aim and in achievement; both have before them a manifest destiny, containing much that is in common and nothing that conflicts. Russia has been and is the great civilizer of the Old World, as the Americans have been of the New, reducing again to the uses of the human race vast territories that had been for centuries sacrificed to the savagery of a degenerated barbarism. In the eastern Mediterranean Russia, in obedience to the dictates of a human heart sensitive to pulsations other than those of a loom, has twice poured out her blood and treasure to rescue fellow-creatures from the knife of the butcher and the cord of the ravisher. Throughout the whole of this career, alike in that part of it which has dealt with the redemption of territorial areas and in that part dealing with the redemption of the human victims of fanaticism, cruelty, and lust, Russia has had one single, steady, consistent opponent. Splashed to the thighs with innocent blood, England has barred the way."

CONCLUSION.

The vainglorious chatter of Anglo-Saxonism against the world, indulged in by a group of silly persons, may result in arraigning the world against the English-speaking races, and the flattering delusion that the United States and Great Britain would be irresistible, even against a European combination, is the sheerest buncombe and nonsense. Those persons who have been thoughtlessly or maliciously attacking the continental powers and impugning the good faith of their governments have incurred a grave responsibility.

Something should be done to clear the atmosphere of this maudlin balderdash, and to place our country before the world in her true light. Too much mischief has been caused already by postprandial orators, sensational preachers, et hoc genus omne, on this side prating about alliances and our international relations. These utterances are eagerly seized upon by English ministers and politicians and dished up to the Continent as the practically unanimous sentiment of the American people. It is notorious that they have been utilized as a club to pound the doors of every chancellerie in Europe. Every observer of international affairs is aware that the position of England has been materially improved by the talk of an Anglo-American alliance, and that her backbone has been strengthened in South Africa, the Orient, and Egypt.

Our Anglo-maniacs have given her reasons to believe that she is no longer isolated. The lightning change in the foreign policy of Salisbury's cabinet in the last year has been the most remarkable event in the history of governmental polity within this generation, and it is solely to be attributed to the diplomatic leverage England has availed herself of as a result of the so-called entente of the "Anglo Saxon" race.

I am convinced that the sooner some responsible American statesman makes a ringing address in the vein of the new diplomacy, repudiating the suggestion of an alliance with any power, the better it would be for our country. It would put a stop once for all to British intrigue and silence the vaporings in England and America. The responsive gushings have become nauseating, and the whole subject, to speak mildly, is a deuced bore. But above all, it would decrease the elements of uneasiness and distrust in regard to us which prevail on the Continent and restore the old ties of friendship which have undoubtedly been weakened by the sycophancy and foolishness of many of our own people.

Why at present any more than in the past should we interweave our destiny with that of any part of Europe and entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European rivalship and interest?

Under a beneficent Providence our country is free and self-sufficing, needing no foreign countenance, no exterior props, and no alien intervention.

The policy that has served it thus far and kept it free and untrammeled from foreign intrigues should be the policy in the future, as it has been in the past. Only persons hostile to the Republic, criminally blind, or sentimentally foolish advocate a change in that position. If, under the circumstances, we should wantonly, rashly, and gratuitously commit ourselves to a policy friendly to the power in Europe that is hated and distrusted by all the others, national disaster and disunion would be within measurable distance.

The persons who have publicly invited such a peril and endeavored to make sentiment in favor of such a fatuous policy are a disgrace to American manhood, American citizenship, and American patriotism. Even though ignorance be their plea, they are dangerous enemies of our Government at a moment when, in view of our new responsibilities, it needs the loyal support of every man who has sworn to maintain its high ideal, its cause, and its flag!

Mr. KNOX. Allow me to inquire whether there are any members on the other side who desire to speak this evening.

Mr. McALEER. No, sir.

Mr. KNOX. Then, as there are none on this side desiring to speak and as it now lacks only a few minutes of 5 o'clock, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration Senate bill No. 222, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and with the Senate amendments referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 5, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. KENNEY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SCHOONER BETSEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of law and of facts filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel sloop schooner Betsey, Lemuel Moody, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. ALEXANDER, and Mr. LANHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1475) to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, and making appropriations therefor; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I present the following resolution, adopted by the legislature of the State of New York:

Resolved, That the attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be called to the urgent necessity for the passage of an act of Congress directing the exchange, at the earliest possible date, of the Springfield rifles and carbines of caliber .45, now in use by the National Guard or organized militia of this and other States, for equal numbers of the arms used by the United States Army.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the accompanying papers, without printing, as that committee is now in session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR submitted an amendment proposing to regulate the hours of service of clerks and employees in first and second class post-offices, intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

IRON AND STEEL PRODUCTION IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the naval appropriation bill, which I think is important and which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, and in connection with it, a letter from Mr. Bawron, a man of great character as a manufacturer in the steel and iron industry, with an accompanying letter from Mr. Aldrich, for the information of the committee to which the matter is referred.

There being no objection, the amendment and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment prepared by Mr. MORGAN to the naval appropriation bill.

To pay the expenses of travel and other incidental expenses of a commission to investigate and report upon the iron and steel productions of the Birmingham district of Alabama, with reference to their usefulness in the construction of ships of war, their armor plating and guns, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Said commission shall consist of three experts, detailed from the offices of the Navy, who shall make an examination of the ores, fuels, fluxes, and other material used in the production and manufacture of iron and steel; and the furnaces and machinery in use, or that are available, in said district; and the quality of the iron and steel that is or can be produced in said district, with reference especially to armor plating and steel for the manufacture of guns of high power.

In their report the commissioners shall give, as near as may be, the cost of the production and manufacture of such metal and its transportation to the seaboard, with such other facts as will show the cost of the same to the Government if purchased or manufactured in said district, and its value for the purposes above mentioned.

TENNESSEE COAL, IRON AND RAILROAD COMPANY,
Birmingham, Ala., March 26, 1900.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of March 11.

I beg to state as follows:

The Birmingham district embraces three distinct coal fields: The Pratt coal field, which contains steam and coking coal; the Blue Creek, which has coking coal only, and the Cahaba, which has steam, gas, and domestic coal. All of these qualities of coal can be delivered in the Birmingham district in unlimited quantity and at low prices. The present daily output of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company is about 14,000 tons of coal, and, whilst we are the largest producer in the State, there are many independent producers, so that there is no semblance of monopoly. The varied quality and suitable character of these coals is perhaps most suitably shown by the fact that amongst them they furnish the fuel for the blast furnaces, rolling mills, foundries, steel works, locomotives, gas works, waterworks, cotton mills, and oil mills of this district, besides being shipped in large quantity for the bunkers of steamers at South Atlantic and Gulf ports, and the coke is shipped for the use of silver smelters in Mexico and the Western States. Coke can be had as low as 9 per cent in ash.

The resources of the district in pig iron are based upon the existence of a horizontal stratified bed of red fossiliferous iron ore, partially decomposed at the outer edge and running 50 per cent in metallic iron, but in its normal condition containing from 32 to 34 per cent of iron and sufficient lime to make it self-fluxing. This deposit averages in the working places in Red Mountain from 5 to 7 feet in thickness and extends without break over 20 miles. It is tilted to an angle varying from 15 to 35 degrees, cropping out some 200 feet above the level of the valley, and is therefore accessible on both sides of Red Mountain, either by slopes or by drifts run in at various levels. This red ore is supplemented by the existence of very many thousands of acres of brown hematite ore or limonite, averaging from 48 to 50 per cent of metallic iron, which ranges from 10 to 50 feet in depth, and which is worked like placer diggings, but not hitherto by the hydraulic system. The combination of these two ores enables the furnaces to work with efficiency and regularity. The subcarboniferous limestone outcrops between the outcrops of coal and iron ore, the whole district being formed by an anticlinal, which has thrown the three respective outcrops closely together. The limestone is of two qualities, both carboniferous and magnesium or dolomitic.

We have, therefore, within the compass of half a county red and brown ores, limestone and dolomite, steam, coking, gas, and household coals. The result is that, owing to the absence of freight charges, which are replaced somewhat by switching charges, these materials are gathered together more easily and more cheaply than in any other part of the world which is known to me. There are in this county 23 blast furnaces, with a daily capacity for production of 4,000 tons of pig iron. This pig iron is of three classes—foundry iron, forge iron, and basic iron for the production of steel. It is being sold and has been sold for many years in every State of the American Union, in Canada, and Mexico; and within the past four years the market of the Birmingham district has extended and become world wide, as our sales are now made to almost every civilized country that is accessible by sea. In pursuance an amplification of this statement are referred to my evidence before the River and Harbor Committee, in the hands of the official stenographer, on the subject of the improvement of the Valley River and Village Creek waterway.

As is well known, the manufacture of Bessemer steel is giving way before the competition of the open-hearth process, and fortunately for this district the open-hearth process, which is the most reliable and produces the highest possible quality of steel, is the one adapted to our needs. This is now being used at two plants within greater Birmingham—one, with a daily capacity of from 1,000 to 1,500 tons, at Ensley, and the other, with a daily capacity of from 100 to 200 tons, in the city itself. The quality of this steel is controllable at will. I may state that shipments have been made of Ensley steel to the Benj. Atha & Illingsworth people at Newark, N. J., who made, I believe, large quantities of projectiles for the United States Government. This steel was relatively high carbon. The bulk of our production thus far has been called for in the shape of low carbon steel, especially suitable for steel hoops, plates, and wire. The average analysis of the first 200 heats of steel made by us, representing, say, 10,000 tons, was:

	Per cent.
Carbon	0.157
Phosphorus	.026
Silicon	.005

Since that time we have as a rule been running on low carbon at the request of some of our customers, to suit the purposes which they have in view. We can deliver any quality of steel required, ranging from carbon 1 per cent down to less than 0.10 per cent. Any one familiar with the manufacture of steel and the open-hearth process will realize that this is a matter wholly within the control of the operator, and that the requirements of the consumer can be adequately met either as to percentage of carbon and manganese or the guaranty of a minimum of phosphorus and sulphur. I have before me numerous analyses showing the sulphur down to 0.011 and phosphorus down to 0.020.

There are three rolling mills in the district, adequately equipped for the production of 400 tons per day of every form of manufactured iron and steel plates, sheets, bars, angles, tees, hoops, etc. Every class of shipbuilding steel can be furnished here, and every class of iron castings except malleable castings. There is also now being built, and will be ready within ninety days, an establishment for the production of 50 tons per day of steel castings.

The city of Birmingham is traversed by two of the largest systems of trunk line in the country, belonging to the Louisville and Nashville and the Southern railways, having also connection with the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham and the Central of Georgia, and having the Mobile and Ohio and the Illinois Central within quite a short distance. It is admirably adapted for the shipment of Government products of steel or iron either to its arsenals or to forts by reason of these railway facilities, and the feasibility of the connection of Birmingham with Mobile by water, which has been already recommended to Congress by the Secretary of War, would permit of the delivery to a Government shipbuilding yard at Mobile of iron and steel necessary for the construction of vessels and the coal required for their bunkers at a rate not exceeding 50 cents per ton.

The district is unique in its concentration of everything which enters into the production of iron and steel at the cheapest possible costs. The facilities are such as should not, in my opinion, be neglected in the consideration by the United States Government of the most economical points of location of its business establishments, especially considering the strategic situation of the city—near enough either to South Atlantic or Gulf ports for ready and rapid access, or to the system of internal waterways which can be reached at Greenville, Miss., or Huntsville or Sheffield, Ala., and yet it is far enough away to be safe from any hostile attack in case of war.

The elevation of the city is 600 feet above tide water, giving excellent climatic conditions. The elevation subdues the temperature in summer, and the latitude prevents any interference by reason of rigorous weather during the winter.

I trust that these facts may be deemed worthy of some further investigation by Congress in its wisdom.

Yours, truly, J. BAWRON, Vice-President.

SLOSS SHEFFIELD STEEL AND IRON COMPANY,
SLOSS IRON AND STEEL COMPANY,
Birmingham, Ala., March 29, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I have a copy of your favor of March 11 to James Bawron, vice-president of the Tennessee Coal, Iron, and Railroad Company, and at his request desire to say that we quite agree with you that this district is worthy of an examination by the Government with reference to a supply of gun metal and armor plate.

I have no doubt that if the Government would make an offer for the purchase of armor plate for a term of years, that the capital could be raised and a plant put up here and the material delivered where needed. If private capitalists could undertake such a work, how much better it would be for the Government than for them to build one for themselves.

This being my view of the matter, I will not go into details as to a supply of the material necessary to make gun metal and armor plate.

Yours, truly,

T. H. ALDRICH.

HON. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present the credentials of Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, chosen by the legislature of Kentucky a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1901, together with some accompanying papers, which I ask to have printed, and that the credentials be placed on the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas desire to have the credentials read?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The credentials are somewhat lengthy, and I suggest that they be printed in the RECORD and also be printed as a document and be placed on the files.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The credentials were ordered to be filed and to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CREDENTIALS OF J. C. S. BLACKBURN.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the following credentials of Joseph C. S. Blackburn, being a transcript from the journals of the proceedings of the legislature of the State of Kentucky in joint assembly, showing the election of Mr. Blackburn as a Senator from that State for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1901.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY:

The undersigned hereby certifies that the following is a true copy, taken from the journal of the house of representatives for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, of the proceedings on the 2d day of January, 1900, showing the election of a clerk of said house:

The speaker then announced that nominations for chief clerk were in order.

Mr. Hickman named Ed. O. Leigh, of the county of McCracken, as a suitable person for said office.

Mr. Slack named C. F. Ogden, of the city of Louisville, as a suitable person for said office.

The vote being taken between those named resulted as follows, viz:

Those who voted for Mr. Leigh were—

M. Abele,	G. T. Finn,	L. C. Rawlings,

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY:

The undersigned hereby certifies that the following is a true copy taken from the journal of the senate for the Commonwealth of Kentucky of the proceedings on the 2d day of January, 1900, showing the election of a clerk of said senate:

The president announced that nominations for chief clerk of the senate were in order.

Whereupon Mr. Thomas nominated Claude Desha, of Harrison County, and Mr. Howard nominated Mr. J. Speed Smith, of Madison County, as suitable persons to fill said office,

There being no other nominations, the vote was then taken thereon, which resulted as follows, viz:

Those who voted for Mr. Desha were—

Geo. H. Alexander,	Newton Frazier,	J. H. McConnell,
J. Embry Allen,	J. G. Furnish,	R. E. Puryear,
John A. Bell,	J. C. Gillespie,	J. M. Thomas,
L. H. Carter,	William Goebel,	R. S. Triplett,
W. O. Coleman,	S. B. Harrel,	Newton W. Utley,
R. C. Crenshaw,	Thos. H. Hays,	W. T. Voiers,
G. T. Farris,	J. J. Johnston,	J. D. Watson,
McD. Ferguson,	W. O. Jones,	T. R. Welch—24.

Those who voted for Mr. Smith were—

John Barret,	N. T. Howard,	T. S. Kirk,
Curtis F. Burnam,	J. P. Huff,	W. E. Miller,
William H. Cox,	B. S. Huntsman,	F. M. White,
C. H. Dye,	R. M. Jolly,	J. L. Whitehead—12.

Whereupon the president declared Mr. Desha duly elected chief clerk of the senate for the present session, who then took the oaths required by the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth.

The undersigned further certifies that the foregoing documents signed "A copy, attest: Claude Desha, chief clerk of senate," and "A copy, attest: Edw. O. Leigh, chief clerk H. R." contains a true copy of the records of the ballotings of the house of representatives and in the joint assembly of the legislature of said State of Kentucky for the election of a United States Senator on the 9th day of January, 1900.

IN THE SENATE, Tuesday, January 9, 1900.

At 12 o'clock m. the president of the senate announced that the hour had arrived for the execution of the special order of the hour, the election of a Senator in the Congress of the United States to succeed Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901.

The president then announced that nominations for the office of the United States Senator were in order.

Whereupon, Mr. Thomas nominated Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn as a suitable person to fill said office.

Mr. Howard nominated Hon. William O. Bradley as a suitable person to fill said office.

There being no other nominations, the president then announced that the clerk would now proceed to take the viva voce vote of the senate, which, being taken, resulted as follows, viz:

Those who voted for Mr. Blackburn were—

J. Embry Allen,	J. G. Furnish,	J. M. Thomas,
John A. Bell,	J. C. Gillespie,	R. S. Triplett,
L. H. Carter,	William Goebel,	Newton W. Utley,
W. O. Coleman,	S. B. Harrel,	W. T. Voires,
R. C. Crenshaw,	J. J. Johnson,	J. D. Watson,
G. T. Farris,	J. H. McConnell,	T. R. Welch—22.
McD. Ferguson,	R. E. Puryear,
Newton Frazier,	A. D. Roberts,

Those who voted for Mr. Bradley were—

John Barret,	N. T. Howard,	T. S. Kirk,
Curtis F. Burnam,	J. P. Huff,	W. E. Miller,
William H. Cox,	B. S. Huntsman,	F. M. White,
C. H. Dye,	R. M. Jolley,	J. L. Whitehead—12.

The president then announced that Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn had received a majority of all the votes cast; the clerk will make such an entry on the journal.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1900.

Messrs. Howard and Farris were appointed a committee on the part of the senate to notify the house of representatives that the senate was ready to proceed to the execution of the joint order of the day—the election of a Senator in the Congress of the United States.

After a short time Mr. Howard, of said committee, reported that the committee had performed that duty.

A message was received from the house of representatives, by Messrs. Terrel, Jarnagin, and Denton, announcing that they were ready to proceed to the execution of said joint order.

The hour of 12 o'clock m. having arrived, the president of the senate announced that the senators would now repair to the hall of the house of representatives for the purpose of ascertaining the vote cast in each house of the general assembly on yesterday for those who had been voted for in the respective houses for the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States to succeed Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901.

Hon. South Trimble, speaker of the house of representatives, pursuant to a joint rule of the senate and house of representatives, took the chair and called the joint assembly to order.

The roll of the joint assembly was then called, and the following members thereof answered to their names:

Senators—

J. Embry Allen,	J. G. Furnish,	R. E. Puryear,
John Barret,	J. C. Gillespie,	A. D. Roberts,
John A. Bell,	William Goebel,	J. M. Thomas,

The joint vote stood:

	Votes.
For Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn	79
For Hon. William O. Bradley	54
Necessary to a choice	67

The speaker of the house of representatives and presiding officer of the joint assembly then announced that the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, having received a majority of all the votes in each house, there being present and voting viva voce a majority of all the members elected to each house of the general assembly, was duly elected a Senator from the State of Kentucky to serve as such in the Congress of the United States for the term of six years, commencing on the 5th day of March, 1901.

The journals of the proceedings of the joint assembly of to-day were then read and approved.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, January 9, 1900.

Mr. Hickman moved that the house do now proceed, in accordance with the statutes in such cases made and provided, to the election of a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky, to succeed the Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901.

Which was agreed to.

The speaker announced that nominations for said office were in order.

Mr. Hickman named the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn as a suitable person to fill said office.

Mr. Slack named the Hon. William O. Bradley as a suitable person to fill said office.

The house then proceeded to take a ballot between those named and in nomination for the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States as aforesaid, which ballot resulted as follows, viz:

Those who voted for Mr. Blackburn were—

Ordered that the clerk enter on the journal that Joseph C. S. Blackburn received a majority of all the votes cast, a majority of all the members elected to the house being present and voting.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, January 10, 1900.

Mr. Terrell moved that a committee of three be appointed to notify the senate that this house is now ready to receive the senate in joint assembly and proceed to the execution of the joint order of the day, pursuant to the laws of the United States and the State of Kentucky, in such cases made and provided, to wit, the election of a Senator from the State of Kentucky in the Congress of the United States to succeed the Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901.

Which motion was agreed to.

The speaker appointed Messrs. Terrell, Denton, and Jarnagin as said committee, who, after a while, reported that they had performed that duty.

A message was received from the senate, by Senators Farris and Howard, announcing that the senate was ready to go into joint assembly for the purpose of executing the joint order as aforesaid.

The hour of 12 o'clock meridian having arrived, the hour for the joint special order of the day, viz, the election of a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky to succeed to the Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901, said special order being in pursuance of an act of Congress of the United States and the law of Kentucky.

The senate of Kentucky, in order, entered upon the floor of the house of representatives in pursuance to a joint rule of the senate and house of representatives; the Hon. South Trimble, speaker of the house of representatives, took the chair and presided, the Hon. John Marshall, lieutenant-governor and president of the senate, having taken his seat upon the left of the speaker. The two houses were convened in joint assembly, the same being composed of a majority of the members elected to each house.

Upon said ballot the vote stood:

	Votes.
For J. C. S. Blackburn	55
For William O. Bradley	41

The following pair was announced, viz:

Mr. Rawlings with Mr. Burkamp. Mr. Rawlings would have voted for Mr. Blackburn, and Mr. Burkamp, if present, would have voted Mr. Bradley.

Ordered, That the clerk enter upon the journal the above proceedings and vote, and that the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn has received a majority of all the votes cast, and that a majority of all the members elected to the house were present and voting.

WEDNESDAY, January 17, 1900.

Mr. Terrell moved that a committee of three members be appointed by the speaker to notify the senate that the house is now ready to receive the senate and to go into joint assembly to execute the special joint order of to-day, to wit, the comparison of the journals of the two houses of this general assembly of yesterday relative to the vote taken therein for the selection of one person as Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky to succeed Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901, and the election of said Senator.

Said motion was agreed to.

The speaker appointed as said committee Messrs. Terrell, Hickman, and Booker.

After a while said committee reported that they had discharged their duty.

The hour of 12 o'clock meridian having arrived, the hour for the joint special order of the day, as provided by an act of Congress and the law of Kentucky, to wit, the reading and comparison of the journals of the two houses of the general assembly of yesterday relative to the election of a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky to succeed the Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901, and the election of said Senator.

The senate of Kentucky, in order, entered upon the floor of the house of representatives, and, in pursuance to a joint rule of the senate and house of representatives, the Hon. South Trimble, speaker of the house of representatives, took the chair and presided. The two houses were convened in joint assembly, the same being composed of a majority of all the members elected to each house.

The roll was then called, and the following members of the joint assembly responded to their names, viz:

Senators—

J. Embry Allen,	J. C. Gillespie,	R. E. Puryear,
John Barret,	William Goebel,	A. D. Roberts,
John A. Bell,	S. B. Harrel,	J. M. Thomas,

	Votes.
In the senate—
For Joseph C. S. Blackburn	22
For William O. Bradley	12
In the house of representatives—
For William O. Bradley	41

It appearing from the reading and comparison of the journals aforesaid that Hon. Joseph C. S. Blackburn received a majority of all the votes cast in each house, a majority of all the members elected to each house being present and voting, the Hon. South Trimble, speaker of the house of representatives, presiding over the joint assembly, announced and declared that the Hon. Joseph C. S. Blackburn is duly elected a Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Kentucky, for the term of six years, to succeed Hon. WILLIAM LINDSAY, whose term of office will expire on the 4th day of March, 1901.

The journals of the proceedings of the joint assembly of to-day were read and approved by the joint assembly.

Senator Allen moved that the joint assembly do now dissolve.

Said motion was agreed to.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill (S. 4014) to authorize Robert Stockwell Hatcher, of the division of customs and insular affairs, War Department, to accept decorations from the governments of Venezuela and Liberia, be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That Senate Executive Report No. 1, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, being a report by Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the proposed interoceanic canal, be reprinted as a Senate document.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any teacher in the public schools of the District has been censured or taken to task by a superior officer on account of the testimony given by such teacher during the recent investigation of the public schools.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MASON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

ROBERT W. DUNBAR.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4011) entitled "A bill for the relief of Robert W. Dunbar," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 39) granting an increase of pension to Caroline V. English;

An act (S. 265) granting an increase of pension to Jane McMahon;

An act (S. 343) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Freeman;

An act (S. 495) granting a pension to Ambrose J. Vanarsdel;

An act (S. 1254) granting a pension to Catherine E. O'Brien;

An act (S. 1592) granting a pension to Jane E. Augur;

An act (S. 1713) granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Jordan;

An act (S. 1752) granting a pension to James J. Wheeler;

An act (S. 2346) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Bigelow;

An act (S. 2368) granting a pension to Mary A. Randall;

An act (S. 3129) granting an increase of pension to Henry McMillen; and

An act (S. 3207) approving a revision and adjustment of certain sales of Otoe and Missouria lands in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 23, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was in hopes that there would be a little time this morning for some small but very important bills.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut what is the character of the bill he desires to bring up?

Mr. HAWLEY. This bill is to supply a daily and continuing want in the Subsistence Department of the Army. I have been besought time and again to get the bill through. It is asked for by the Secretary of War and the Commissary Department.

Mr. PENROSE. If it will not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not see how it can give rise to any discussion. The case is absolutely clear, and it will be seen that it is necessary.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3430) to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the United States Army.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there shall be added to the Subsistence Department of the Army one assistant commissary-general of subsistence with the rank of colonel, one assistant commissary-general of subsistence with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and four commissaries of subsistence with the rank of captain.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an additional section to the bill as an amendment, which I think will be accepted by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. An amendment to this bill?

Mr. CARTER. To the Subsistence Department bill. I will have it read for the Senator's information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. The Acting Commissary-General shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of brigadier-general, and the President is hereby authorized to appoint and commission an officer to that rank to be Commissary-General of Subsistence during the suspension or until the retirement of an officer heretofore commissioned.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a new question, I think.

Mr. CARTER. It will hardly lead to any debate, but if it does I suggest to the Senator that I will withdraw it. I can explain it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it has been considered by the committee, and it involves a rather important question.

Mr. CARTER. It has not been considered by the committee, but I will state that the present chief of that department or division——

Mr. COCKRELL. I sympathize fully with what ought to be done, but whether this is the right way to do it or not is another question. I think the other one ought to have been displaced, but I do not think we ought to be forced to do anything of that kind in such a plain case.

Mr. CARTER. Rather than that it should lead to any discussion of the matter, I will withdraw the proposed amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL WHITE CROSS.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2581) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, page 2, line 16, after the word "Navy" to strike out the words "Mr. CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, of Minnesota."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "proceedings," in section 3, page 3, line 24, to strike out:

Shall communicate to Congress such portions of said report as may be deemed of national interest and importance when directed to do so."

And insert:

Together with a detailed statement of all receipts and expenditures, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress and printed.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said National White Cross of America shall report annually to the Secretary of War concerning its proceedings, together with a detailed statement of all receipts and expenditures, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress and printed. It shall perform such relief work as may, from time to time, be assigned to it by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, if the means therefor are placed at its disposal, and it may perform its work of charity at any place in the United States or in any foreign country or province as it may deem wise and proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I move to amend the bill by striking out my name where it appears. I doubt the propriety of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 8, after the word "Columbia," strike out the words "Mr. JOHN M. THURSTON, of Nebraska."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRAVEL PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. WARREN. With the courtesy of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3616) to authorize the payment of traveling allowances to enlisted men of the regular and volunteer forces when discharged by order of the Secretary of War and stated by him as entitled to travel pay. It is a short bill and will lead to no discussion, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that I had risen to take the floor on the resolution pending, and that while I am happy to yield to other Senators, I do not admit that the Senator from Pennsylvania has charge of my remarks. I am ready to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill indicated by the Senator from Wyoming will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That when the Secretary of War, in the exercise of his discretion, has directed the discharge of any enlisted men of the regular or volunteer forces of the Army, and the orders or instructions directing such discharge stated that such enlisted men were entitled to travel pay, such order or instruction shall be sufficient authority for the payment to the soldiers of the traveling allowances provided for by section 1290 of the Revised Statutes. And officers of the Pay Department of the Army shall have credit in the settlement of their accounts for all payments made in obedience to said orders or instructions of the Secretary of War: Provided, That soldiers discharged under such orders or instructions, which stated that such soldiers were entitled to travel pay, and who were absent by authority on the date of the muster out of their regiments or of discharge, are entitled to and will be paid traveling allowances from place of muster out of their regiments or the places designated in the final statements as the place of discharge to the place of enlistment or enrollment: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to cases that have arisen or shall arise under orders or instructions for discharge with travel pay issued between April 21, 1898, and the date of the passage of this act: Provided further, That it shall not be held as applying to any case in which the order directing the discharge did not set forth that the soldier was entitled to travel pay.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like a little explanation of the bill. Is it the case that they can not receive their travel pay now, when it has been certified upon their discharge that they are entitled to it? Why can they not get it now?

Mr. WARREN. Unfortunately, the Auditor and the Comptroller have decided that the orders of the Secretary of War were in conflict with the statute. Therefore paymasters who have invested quite an amount, three or four of them some thousands of dollars each, have had their accounts suspended and they are standing unsettled since last September. Still worse, a quite large number of enlisted men are without relief in the settlement of their accounts.

This bill has been submitted to the War Department. It has the sanction of the Secretary of War and is unanimously recommended by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And this is one of the cases where the Auditors and the Comptrollers are so technical that really the spirit and even the letter of the statutes are not complied with.

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGES OF EMPLOYEES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, furnishing, so far as the Department of State is concerned, the information called for by the resolution of the Senate of March 16, 1900, as to the ages and capacity for the performance of manual labor of the employees of the several Executive Departments.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 5, 1900.

ENTRY OF MERCHANDISE IN TEXAN PORTS, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7939) to amend an act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to extend the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to the ports of Laredo, Eagle Pass, and El Paso, Tex., and Nogales, Ariz.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS—AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me just a moment for a personal statement?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, since my return from Cuba a day or two ago my attention has been called to what seems to be an Associated Press dispatch from Habana. I hope the Senate will indulge me for paying any attention to such matters. This is the second time I have felt called upon to do so in the Senate. It is headed, "Stirring up the Cubans; disquieting utterances attributed to two visiting Senators." Then there is a long dispatch which seems to be from the agent of the Associated Press in Habana, copying what purports to be an interview from a Cuban paper with Senator PETTIGREW and myself, and commenting upon that purported interview. This is one of the sentences of the editorial comments by the Habana press agent, whoever he is:

Some of the hot-heads of Cuba are liable to be overstepping the bounds. If a clash comes and any American blood is spilled it can not but be attributed to the work of BUTLER and PETTIGREW.

Mr. President, this statement is not only gratuitous, but willfully and maliciously false; and, besides, the purported interview was manufactured out of the whole cloth.

When Senator PETTIGREW and I arrived in Habana we were waited upon by a number of newspaper men, and we positively declined to be interviewed by any of them, stating that we had not come to Cuba to express our opinion, but to see and to learn. We said the same thing to every other reporter who came. Notwithstanding that statement from us, every morning while we were in Cuba some of the papers published purported interviews with us without our even seeing the reporters.

The paper that this purported interview was in, the Cubano, I never saw while I was in Cuba, and I never saw a representative of it. The only statement that I did make while in Cuba was not to a newspaper man, but was in the palace of the governor of Pinar del Rio. While we were there the governor invited the mayor and a number of leading Cubans and Spaniards to meet us.

I think there were seven or eight Spaniards in the audience, three or four of Gomez's generals, and a number of citizens. They requested me to make some statement. I hesitated to do so, but at last I did make a statement, and the only reason why I made it was because I had been informed there was some danger that the impatience of the Cubans at our seeming delay would cause some friction or trouble; and to meet just that point I made a statement, the substance of which I will now state.

It was in substance as follows: That the Cubans need not be uneasy or fearful that the United States Congress or the American people would be false to them and fail to carry out the pledge contained in the resolution declaring for their independence. I assured them that they did not lack for friends in the United States; I warned them that the only real enemies to Cuba's independence who could be effective would be those in Cuba who claimed that it was necessary to agitate and organize to watch us to keep us from being false to them; that such persons could only do harm, and that if independence was endangered or delayed it would be due to the trouble caused by such emissaries; that the Cubans had plenty of friends in the United States; that I knew of no one in the United States who dared to declare to the contrary, and if any did they would be swept from power, whether a party or an individual, because 70,000,000 American people stood true to that declaration and would see that it was carried out; that all the Cubans had to do was to have patience and to show that they were worthy of the confidence that we had placed in them, and for them to guard well against enemies on the inside.

I thought that statement was appropriate from what I had learned. To meet just that condition, as set forth in this dispatch, I made that statement. Now, Mr. President, to show how well that statement was received by the Spaniards, by the Cuban annexationists, and by the Cuban generals, the revolutionists—there were a number of them present, and there was also present the president of the Veterans' Association—I ask to have read and put into the RECORD a letter which was written me the following day by the governor of the province, addressed to me at Habana, expressing his appreciation on the part of the people for that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter referred to will be read, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the translation only may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CIVIL GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF PINAR DEL RIO,
March 29, 1900.

HONORED SIR: I wish you to take to your country, and show in the Senate, of which you are an honored member, the evidence of the favorable impression which your kind visit to this city has made upon us.

I can not repress the delight and enthusiasm awakened in my Cuban soul by the beautiful phrases which we heard here from your lips, speaking with authority; and, in so expressing myself, I am persuaded that I interpret faithfully the sentiment of all the patriots of this, my beloved province, where I first saw the light of the radiant sun, and from where I behold the flags of independence of my Cuba as unhappy as heroic.

Remember, in your parliamentary struggle, those expressive sentences of your conference:

"Behind the promise of the American Congress to concede to Cuba her independence there are 70,000,000 free citizens whose hearts beat in unison with that generous sentiment.

"The United States will be the big brother standing by the side of the little brother, Cuba, to say to the whole world, 'Touch him not, as I have shed my blood to redeem him and have consecrated my purpose to educating him for public life and for the exercise of freedom.'"

These sentences remain engraved on our hearts as one of the most sincere and spontaneous declarations that you have made to the Cubans, and we hope confidingly in the magnanimity of your gracious nation.

GUILLIERMO DOLZ, Civil Governor.

Senator MARION BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I make this statement, first, because I feel that it is due to my fellow-Senators to let them know, if they have seen the statements of this purported interview, that they are not true; second, and chiefly, for the effect that it may have in Cuba. I found in Cuba many of the leading and most influential citizens who are keeping up daily with what goes on here and who carefully read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I want such citizens in Cuba to know that such reports as these, which they see in their own papers, are false. This dispatch to which I have just referred was manufactured by an enemy of Cuban independence. I make this statement to prevent it from doing the damage that its author intended and hoped that it would do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish briefly to add to the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that, so far as I am concerned, I had no interview and made none of the statements attributed to the Senator from North Carolina and myself in the purported Associated Press dispatch. I hardly thought the dispatch worth noticing. I suppose it was composed by some space writer, who gets paid for the lines the newspapers will print, who thought it necessary to put something sensational into his communication in order to secure the printing of a long dispatch, thus enhancing his compensation.

The trouble with the Associated Press is that it very often employs entirely irresponsible people and then makes no effort to ascertain whether communications sent them are true or false. This practice seems to have extended to Cuba. We know it is quite prevalent in this country. So much is this true that the American people no longer believe, without corroborating evidence, most of the stuff which appears in the great American dailies. This is a condition to be deplored, but it is so well recognized by the people of the United States that if public men generally undertook to follow up and deny the falsehoods circulated with regard to them they would be exceedingly busy. Therefore I thought the communication hardly worthy of notice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. If the honorable Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I think it proper to say here that the Associated Press agent in Habana called to see the Senator from South Dakota and myself to procure an interview, but we declined to be interviewed and told him that we had refused to give an interview to any representative or any newspaper. Therefore, when he sent out this purported interview, he knew what we had told him, and he knew, further, that we refused to give him an interview.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is true; but whether the person who sent this dispatch is the man purported to be the representative of the Associated Press who called upon us, I do not know nor do I care. I do not even remember his name.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I am chairman of the Committee on Relations with Cuba and that I was one of the subcommittee which recently visited Cuba, it may be proper for me to say a word.

When my attention was called to the dispatch to which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has referred, I said I did not believe that there was one word of truth in it, although the subcommittee was obliged to leave Cuba before having any conference or consultation with the Senator from North Carolina, who is on the committee, or with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. We did know whilst we were in Cuba that those Senators had absolutely declined to be interviewed and that they had stated that they were there to learn the conditions for themselves and not to make statements.

I was as sure when I saw that dispatch, or when my attention was called to it, that there was no foundation for it as I am now after the explanation has been made by the Senator from North Carolina.

It is, perhaps, proper that I should also say one other word; and that is, that if there is anyone in the Senate of the United States or in the House of Representatives or in the executive department of the United States, or among its people who does not intend in good faith to keep the promise that was made in the resolution of intervention, and see to it that an independent government is established in Cuba by the people thereof, I do not know such a person. I believe there is but one sentiment on that subject in the United States.

I want to say still further that I believe, so far as the people of Cuba are concerned, that there are very few, if any, who do not believe that the United States intends to keep its promise to the letter as well as in its spirit. Of course there are agitators there, as there are in the United States, but they are few; they do not represent the people, and they do not represent any of the classes of the people in Cuba. There is the utmost confidence in Cuba in the people of the United States and the utmost good will in the United States toward the people of Cuba.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before proceeding to a brief discussion of the resolution which has been laid before the Senate, and in view of what has transpired during the last few minutes, I will take occasion to allude to a personal matter in connection with a visit I made to the island of Cuba two years ago.

The Senators from South Dakota and North Carolina have been misrepresented and villified by the Associated Press. On that occasion I was misrepresented and villified by a representative of a great New England newspaper, who holds a seat in the Senate press gallery. A statement was sent out by that correspondent that I, as well as the other Senators and Members of the House of Representatives who accompanied me, had accepted a large sum of money from a newspaper publisher in the United States for certain service that we had rendered him incident to that visit. That statement found a place in almost every newspaper in the country, certainly in almost every Democratic newspaper, and some very good people were led to believe that there might be some truth in the matter; but it is proper that I should say that it was not believed in New Hampshire. Some of the best friends I have in the world have criticised me because I did not make a disclaimer in the Senate. Indeed, I had a disclaimer prepared, but, upon second thought, I concluded not to make it, believing that it was not worth while to take the time of the Senate by personal explanations.

I have, Mr. President, documents in my possession which refute every allegation that was made against me in connection with that matter, and which show that I, like many other public men—most of them of much more consequence than I am—have been subject to these brutal, inhuman, heartless, and false attacks.

There was not a word or suggestion of truth in the lengthy statement which was printed in that newspaper; and I take this opportunity, although it is two years old, to assert it, so that if any of my friends anywhere in the world are troubled over the matter they may know that I have explicitly and emphatically denied the statement. It was utterly without foundation, and a discredit to fair and decent journalism.

Now, Mr. President, I will ask that the resolution in relation to the case of Mr. Quay be laid before the Senate.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 23, 1900, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not occupy much time in the discussion of the question under consideration, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and other Senators have already covered the ground fully, citing all the precedents, and conclusively showing that to seat Mr. Quay will be a reversal of the practice of the Senate which has prevailed uninterruptedly for the last seventy-five years. Before the discussion closes the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will undoubtedly review the case in all its aspects, and call to the attention of the Senate the overwhelming reasons why the report of the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections should be concurred in. It is gratifying to me that this important question is being considered calmly and deliberately, with a view to ascertaining the real meaning and intent of the Federal Constitution in respect to the appointment of Senators by the governors of States, and I can not for a moment believe that a majority will be found, when the final vote shall be taken, in favor of the contention of the minority, notwithstanding the tremendous efforts that have been made and the powerful influences that have been exerted to induce the Senate to seat Mr. Quay. Had I yielded to the importunities of warm personal and political friends in my own State, I should vote against the majority of the committee, but I prefer to be guided by convictions of right and duty, which lead me irresistibly to the conclusion that it will be a great mistake to recognize the validity of Mr. Quay's appointment.

It is rather amusing to a layman to witness the legal technicalities and constitutional hairsplitting that some of the great lawyers of the Senate are introducing into this discussion, and it seems to me that the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama should give the matter some attention. "Happen" and "otherwise," two simple words the meaning of which the ordinary schoolboy would be disciplined for not knowing, are twisted and contorted into shapes such as the fathers of the Constitution could never have contemplated. I also notice that the Senator from Pennsylvania has promised to enlighten the Senate on the meaning of the word "such;" indeed, I understood him to say that Mr. Quay's right to a seat largely depends upon the correct understanding of that innocent little word, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], judging by the unction with which he pronounced that word in his speech, seems to have discovered that the key to the situation is found in the word "shall," the Constitution providing that the Senate "shall" be composed of two Senators from each State; ergo, there must always be two Senators from each State.

In the same line of reasoning it may be suggested that as a regiment shall be composed of a certain number of officers and men, it is not a regiment unless it has in its ranks precisely the designated number of officers and men. Much time is being spent upon the proposition that the framers of the Constitution intended that the Senate should always be full, while there is not a single line or word, so far as I have been able to discover, in the debates preceding the adoption of the Constitution to justify the contention that that was uppermost in the minds of those who drafted the instrument.

In one sense there is apparent justification for this contention and that is found in the fact that the framers of the organic law created the necessary machinery to keep the Senate substantially full, precisely as they created the necessary machinery to keep the House of Representatives substantially full. In the matter of the Senate the State legislatures are charged with the duty of electing Senators, temporary appointments to be made by the executive if vacancies happen when the legislature is not in session, such appointments to be valid until the legislature has had an opportunity to perform its constitutional function, while in the case of a vacancy in the House of Representatives it becomes the duty of the executive of the State to issue his warrant for a new election to fill the vacancy. There is the machinery. It is ample and complete in both cases, but the State legislature may fail or refuse to perform its constitutional duty and the governor may refuse to issue his warrant for an election. Should this occur in either case a vacancy would result, the filling of which is beyond the prerogative of the executive of a State.

It seems to me that no plainer or more easily understood words were ever penned than those of Article I, section 3, of the Constitution, and I am at an utter loss to understand how they can be read otherwise than to deny to the governor of Pennsylvania the right to appoint Mr. Quay to a seat in this body. The Constitution says:

> If vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

It will thus be seen that the governor of a State may make a temporary appointment to a vacancy happening "during the recess of the legislature," and that being so, it logically follows that he can not make an appointment at any other period or under any other circumstances. In this case the legislature was in session when the vacancy occurred, and hence it was not a vacancy that the governor could constitutionally fill, it not having happened "during the recess of the legislature." Had the framers of the Constitution entertained the view held by the minority of the committee, the words "during the recess of the legislature" would not have been incorporated in that instrument, thus leaving the executive free to fill all vacancies, however and whenever they occurred. That the Constitution imposed a limitation on the power of appointment is proof positive that it was not the intention of the authors of the Constitution to keep the Senate full at all hazards, but rather to place the power of electing Senators in the hands of the State legislatures, and simply giving to the executive the limited power of appointment until such time as the legislature could constitutionally fill the vacancy by an election.

It is interesting to note that in the debates on the adoption of the Federal Constitution Mr. Ellsworth said, in speaking of the power of the governor to temporarily make appointments during the recess of the State legislature:

> When the legislative session happens to be near the power will not be exerted.

What does that language mean if it does not mean that, it being the duty of the legislature to fill all possible vacancies, the exercise of limited gubernatorial power will be withheld when the legislative session is near at hand? But Mr. Ellsworth did not say that if the legislature failed to elect then the governor could step in and make an appointment. That is a new doctrine, without warrant in anything that can be found in the debates on the adoption of the Constitution, or in the Constitution itself.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts during this debate paid a very high compliment to Mr. Ellsworth, saying, as I remember it, that "no greater lawyer ever lived." It is interesting to note the fact that in 1794, five years after the organization of the Government, seven members of the Constitutional Convention were members of the Senate, Mr. Ellsworth being one of them. He had served in the Constitutional Convention as a member of the committee on "detail," which put the finishing touches to the Constitution. A vacancy occurred in the Senate in that year (1794), Mr. Read, of Delaware, having resigned. The legislature met the following winter, and adjourned without filling the vacancy.

After the adjournment of the legislature Kensey Johns was appointed by the governor, and the Senate refused to recognize the validity of his credentials. The case went to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which Mr. Ellsworth was a member, and it is to be presumed that if the men who framed the Constitution had intended to keep the Senate always full by providing that the governor should be clothed with authority to make appointments whenever a vacancy existed, that Mr. Ellsworth and his associate members of the Constitutional Convention, then Senators, would have voted to seat Mr. Johns. Instead of that Mr. Johns was rejected, only 7 votes being cast in favor of seating him. It seems to me that upon this case this entire contention can be rested, no matter how conflicting the decisions of the Senate may have been during the intervening time; and when we likewise take into account that during the last seventy-five years no case has been decided different from that of Kensey Johns, it seems idle for Senators to insist that the precedents so numerous and so conclusive have no special weight in the determination of the present case.

And it will not do for Senators to argue, as has been done in this debate, that circumstances may arise—such as the existence of three or more parties in the legislature—where it may be impossible for a legislature to elect, and hence that the governor should have the unrestrained right to appoint. There are difficulties and imperfections in every scheme of human origin. Undoubtedly there are, in isolated cases, difficulties in the way of electing Senators by State legislatures, but notwithstanding that the sufficient answer is that it is the method of the Constitution, and that until the Constitution is changed the power can not be delegated to the occupants of gubernatorial chairs. And it should be kept in mind that the case under consideration is not one where an election was defeated because of the presence of several political parties in the legislature, so that even that plausible argument for overriding the Constitution can not be invoked in Mr. Quay's behalf.

Mr. President, I believe this is the fourth time I have been called upon, during my membership in this body, to vote to seat Senators on credentials similar to those presented by Mr. Quay. Had I allowed myself to be influenced by personal considerations, I should certainly have voted differently from what I did in at least one of those cases. I was surprised to hear the Senator from Massachusetts say that three recent cases were decided not on constitutional grounds, but on the questions of silver and gold. The Senator's words were these:

> Does anybody doubt, who sat here, that in the three cases of Mantle, Beckwith, and Allen, those gentlemen would have been seated almost without question on the authority of the cases of Blair and Bell, had it not been that three silver men were desiring to take their seats when we were coming to the great struggle for the repeal of the Sherman law?

I do not agree with that statement, and the best proof I can produce is the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts voted consistently, in all the cases on the one side, and I voted consistently on the other side. Neither he nor I was swayed by the fact that Mantle was a silver man and Corbett a gold man, and surely neither the Senator from Massachusetts nor I can properly question the equal sincerity of the other Senators who voted on those cases, all of which were decided in accordance with an unvarying line of precedents from 1825 to the present time, and hence the presumption that they were decided correctly.

I want to file a disclaimer against the New Hampshire cases being cited as parallel cases to those of Mantle, Beckwith, and Allen. They are as far removed from those cases as the Quay case is from that of the junior Senator from Vermont, who properly holds his seat by virtue of gubernatorial appointment.

But let us look a little further at the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that the question of the repeal of the so-called Sherman law decided the fate of Mantle, Beckwith, and Allen. A reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that Senators DAVIS, of Minnesota; FRYE, of Maine; Higgins, of Delaware; and Sherman, of Ohio, all of whom were tolerably good gold men, voted to seat Mantle, while other gold men were paired in his favor. Against Mantle, the votes of Senators BERRY, of Arkansas; Call, of Flordia; Coke, of Texas; George, of Mississippi; Pasco, of Flordia; Vance, of North Carolina; VEST, of Missouri, and White, of California, all earnest silver men, were cast. In addition, Senators ALLEN, of Nebraska; Harris, of Tennessee, and Mitchell, of Oregon, all silver men, were paired against Mantle. It is indisputable that the silver men would have seated Mantle if that had been the issue, and the fact that they did not do so ought to estop further argument on that point.

The Senator from Massachusetts said the other day: "The one single thing we have to settle is what the Constitution means." We all agree to that, and those of us who contend that the credentials now presented are not only faulty, but absolutely void rest our contention, without evasion or qualification, upon the language of the Constitution already quoted. If the vacancy had occurred during a recess of the legislature, then manifestly the governor could have appointed, but as it occurred when the legislature was in session the appointment is an illegal and worthless one. Let the governor of Pennsylvania, instead of grasping unconstitutional power, call the legislature together, as the constitution of Pennsylvania commands him to do, and thus give the body clothed by the constitution with power to elect a Senator another opportunity to do so. Let him follow the example of the governor of California, which resulted so satisfactorily to both the State and the country.

Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in his address, but I should like to correct a statement relative to local matters in Pennsylvania.

It is admitted, and has been expressly declared in the public press by all parties to this controversy in Pennsylvania, that it would be absolutely futile and impossible to accomplish anything in an extra session of the Pennsylvania legislature. The independent Republicans, the regular Republicans, and the Democrats, through their leaders, have officially and deliberately made this statement in the public prints. The governor of Pennsylvania, under these circumstances, may well hesitate before he imposes the burden of a very considerable expense, running into an amount of several hundred thousand dollars, upon the people of the State for an object which, in the opinion of everybody, is impossible of accomplishment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reply to that, I will say that, as I read the constitution of Pennsylvania, the governor had a duty to perform, the constitution saying that he "shall" reconvene the legislature within a given time for this specific purpose.

The Senator from Pennsylvania on a former occasion made substantially the same statement which he has now made, that it was agreed on all hands that it would be futile to call the legislature together. Even that does not justify the governor of Pennsylvania in refusing to do what the constitution of his State says he shall do.

But, Mr. President, I hold in my hand a clipping from the Philadelphia Press, a very respectable paper, dated March 29, 1900, only a few days ago, in which this paper says:

SENATOR PENROSE'S MISSTATEMENT.

Senator WELLINGTON, in his clear and forcible argument in the Senate against the seating of Mr. Quay upon the unconstitutional appointment of Governor Stone, called attention to the fact that if Governor Stone had paid heed to the provisions of the constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which he had sworn in the most solemn manner to protect and defend, the legislature of Pennsylvania would have been called together in a special session, and there would to-day be a Senator duly elected by the legislature of Pennsylvania, as has happened in California.

Mr. PENROSE, interrupting him, said: "I make the statement that the contrary is the opinion of all parties to the controversy in Pennsylvania. The Democrats, the independent Republicans, and the regular Republicans have all agreed, and so declared in the public prints, that it would be impossible to elect, and that the reconvening of the legislature would be futile."

This is the most extraordinary statement—

Says the editor of the Philadelphia Press—

that has yet emanated from the Senator now representing the Pennsylvania machine at Washington. Immediately following the adjournment of the legislature the Quay emissaries scoured the State in their endeavor to secure pledges from Democrats and Republicans * * * that if the legislature should be reconvened they would vote for the election of ex-Senator Quay. The net result of the canvass produced but one change of heart, and that in a man who had been, and still is, an aspirant for the speakership. The legislature, therefore, was not convened in special session in accordance with the specific provisions of the constitution in such cases provided. In plain words, the governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania broke his oath of office in order to serve his boss, indulging the vain hope that the United States Senate could be induced by hook or by crook to reverse all precedents in favor of Mr. Quay.

The paper continues:

It is not true and never has been true that all parties in Pennsylvania have agreed and so declared in the public prints that it would be impossible to elect a Senator in Pennsylvania in the event of an extra session being called. Mr. PENROSE misinformed the Senate when he interpolated that statement in the very able speech of Senator WELLINGTON.

This is from one of the leading newspapers of the great city of Philadelphia, a Republican newspaper, and I simply present it in answer to the contention of my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to inform the Senator from New Hampshire that the statements of the paper he refers to in this controversy are absolutely partisan and unreliable, and frequently the newspaper is guilty of deliberate distortion of the truth.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a pretty serious accusation to make against a Cabinet minister; but then I am not here to defend either him or the Philadelphia Press. I simply read the editorial in answer to the Senator's contention that the parties in Pennsylvania had agreed that nothing could come if the Pennsylvania legislature should be reconvened according to the mandate of the State constitution, and that is all.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator will permit me one word more. I do not know why the Senator should have brought into this discussion a reference to a Cabinet minister. My understanding and information of the gentleman to whom he obviously refers are that he has no longer any official or business connection with the paper to which the Senator refers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I accept that correction, of course. I had supposed that the contrary was the fact.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me just a word?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I desire to say, in reference to the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that I have received a number of letters from prominent Republicans in Pennsylvania, who say that in their judgment the Senator was mistaken in his assertion upon that occasion, and that there is a sentiment there that there would have been and could have been a solution of this matter in the legislature.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not weary the Senate by citing precedents. That ground has already been fully covered. But as the New Hampshire cases of Bell, Blair, and Marston have been alluded to, I will endeavor to show that those cases, whether they were decided wisely or not, contain no element of comfort for those who are attempting to seat Mr. Quay. A short time ago I pointed out the fact that by an amendment of our State constitution in 1876 the date of election was changed from March to November, and from annual to biennial, while the meeting of the legislature was continued in the month of June. A vacancy occurred, by expiration of term, on the 4th day of March, 1879, three months before the time of the meeting of the legislature. Under these circumstances the governor appointed Mr. Bell, and after a lengthy and very able debate he was seated by a vote of 35 to 28. There was a difference of opinion in the State as well as in the Senate as to the right of the governor to appoint a Senator at the beginning of a term, and I am free to say that I have never believed that either Mr. Bell or Mr. Blair should have been admitted, especially so from the fact that the State deliberately created the interregnum between March 4 and the meeting of the legislature, thus depriving the State for three months of its full representation in the Senate, except by gubernatorial appointment. At the meeting of the legislature in June Mr. Blair was elected Senator.

In 1883 another vacancy was to occur by reason of the expiration of the term of Senator Rollins, and in 1881 a sharp contention arose over another phase of the controversy. The Federal statute, passed July 25, 1866, provides that Senators shall be elected by the legislature chosen next preceding the expiration of a term. One faction in the Republican party of New Hampshire contended that the intention of the statute was to impose the duty of electing a Senator upon the legislature chosen "and organized" next preceding the expiration of a term, while the other faction insisted upon a strict compliance with the language of the statute. In 1878 this question had been brought to the attention of the Senate, and a report was made by Senator McMillan, of Minnesota, which sustains the view of the strict constructionists, but it was said that the report was made without any real consideration of the matter, to please the New Hampshire Senator whose term was then about to expire.

In 1881 the question as to which legislature should elect was transferred to the State, and it developed into one of great bitterness. The supreme court of the State was called on for a decision, and the court, composed of four Democrats and three Republicans, rendered a unanimous opinion that the legislature elected "and organized," to wit, the legislature of 1881, was the proper body to elect a Senator for the term commencing March 4, 1883. The legislature was Republican, and a large majority of the members of that party met in caucus and nominated Mr. Rollins, the then Senator. A minority of the Republican members refused to be bound by the caucus, and by uniting with the Democrats prevented an election, and the legislature in June, 1883, elected Mr. Pike, notwithstanding Mr. Rollins was again nominated by the Republican caucus. There being no special session of the Senate that year no appointment was made for the period between March and June.

In March, 1885, another vacancy occurred, and as a special session of the Senate was to be held, Mr. Blair was appointed to succeed himself, and after an earnest and able debate was given his seat, to which he was reelected in June following.

In March, 1889, Mr. Marston was appointed under similar circumstances and seated, Mr. CHANDLER being elected his successor in June of that year.

This, in brief, is the story of the New Hampshire cases. It is evident that whether they were decided in accordance with the terms of the Constitution or not the vacancies occurred and the appointments were made at a time when the legislature was not in session, and in each instance the next succeeding legislature performed its constitutional function and filled the vacancy by election. There were, as I have already said, differences among the people of the State as to the right of the governor to appoint, but no citizen of New Hampshire, so far as I have ever heard, Democrat or Republican, for one moment believed that if the legislature failed to fill the vacancy at the first opportunity the governor could again appoint, which is the contention of the minority in this case.

Mr. President, when we come to the final analysis, it means simply that the Constitution says that when a vacancy happens, occurs, or comes to pass, if you please, the governor can appoint if the happening, occurring, or coming to pass is during the recess of the legislature, and by all fair interpretation it means that he can not appoint except when those conditions exist.

Submit the question to 50 intelligent men who have never before considered it and I venture the prediction that every one of them will so interpret the Constitution. But let the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, with his adroitness and skill, take them in hand, telling them that "happen" does not mean happen, that "otherwise" has a hidden or occult meaning beyond the grasp of the ordinary mind, that "such" is a word of very difficult interpretation, and that beyond the possibility of question Madison and Jefferson had in view above all other things the necessity of keeping the Senate full—"always full," as the Senator from Massachusetts said in a former debate—and doubtless some of the 50 would be greatly puzzled as to the real meaning of this plain provision of the Federal Constitution.

I was struck, Mr. President, by the earnestness with which the Senator from Massachusetts, in his zeal to keep the Senate full, pressed home the importance of a single vote, among other things saying that on a certain occasion a single vote elected the governor of Massachusetts, but the Senator failed to say that thousands of the electors of Massachusetts failed to vote at those elections. The laws of Massachusetts contemplate that all qualified voters shall vote, but as a matter of fact they do not do so. The Constitution of the United States provides that the legislatures of the States shall elect Senators. As the withholding of the ballot in the State may produce untoward results, so the failure of the legislature to perform its constitutional function will temporarily deprive the State of full representation in the Senate. True, as pointed out by the Senator from Massachusetts, the State is protected by the plurality rule, but, unfortunately or otherwise, the Constitution does not contain the plurality provision in the matter of electing United States Senators.

A single vote has unquestionably played an important part in our history. During the last Congress it became the duty of the Vice-President, I think on more than one occasion, to cast the decisive vote when the Senate was a tie. That vote might have been cast on some question that would have meant weal or woe to the political party with which he was associated, or upon some question of the gravest concern to the American people. That high office is now vacant; that vote, which might have been so important, can not be cast, and there is no provision in the Constitution to fill the place so lately occupied by one of the best and ablest men of the country. That vote is silent simply because there is no constitutional way of supplying it, precisely as the vote from the State of Pennsylvania is silent until such time as the legislature shall supply it.

The Senator from Massachusetts has twice during this debate undertaken to prejudice the case by calling attention to the fact that he is receiving letters against Mr. Quay, attacking his character, or something of that kind. He went so far as to say, "The spirit which is abroad among these worthy men in the State of Pennsylvania and elsewhere is the spirit of the Dreyfus trial; nothing else." The Senator also suggested that he presumed such letters are coming to other Senators. For one I confess that I have received no letters that have reminded me of the Dreyfus incident; indeed, I can not recall a single letter, except one anonymous one, that was not proper and respectful and that was written in behalf of Mr. Quay.

But I beg to remind the Senator from Massachusetts that those of us who have been supposed to be against Mr. Quay have been subjected likewise to some annoyance in the matter of letters, and to personal solicitation of a most extraordinary kind. Possibly we have not been reminded of the Dreyfus matter, but we have been compelled to sometimes wonder upon what hypothesis those speaking for Mr. Quay ventured to do it in the manner they did. This is not the place, Mr. President, it seems to me, to discuss that phase of this question, but I will venture to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that I will be pleased to compare my mail with his, with a view of determining which side has resorted to unusual methods to influence votes.

But, Mr. President, I promised myself not to delay the determination of this case by occupying much time in its discussion, and hence will hasten to conclude. When the Mantle case was before the Senate, I spoke briefly, reaching certain conclusions, which I will now summarize:

1. I am opposed to seating Mr. Quay because to do so will, in my opinion, be a violation of both the letter and spirit of the Constitution, which provides that the terms of Senators shall be for six years, and that they shall be elected by the legislatures of the States, the executive having the right to make temporary appointments only in cases where the legislative branch can not exercise its constitutional prerogative, because it has not had an opportunity to do so.

2. I am opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay because such action will be an acknowledgment of the right of the executive to fill all vacancies, however occurring. It will inevitably lead to endless contention in the several States, and very likely result, at some future time, in a Senate composed of a majority of members not elected by State legislatures, but the appointees of governors.

3. I am opposed to seating Mr. Quay because the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, whose duty it was to elect, adjourned without performing its constitutional function, thus voluntarily and absolutely relinquishing its right to full representation in this body, and because the governor of the State, whose duty it was, under the constitution of Pennsylvania, to reconvene the legislature for another trial, neglected to do so, preferring to take the matter into his own hands.

4. I am opposed to seating Mr. Quay because such action on the part of the Senate will introduce a veritable Pandora's box into our political system and will give direct encouragement to ambitious and unscrupulous men to devise means to nullify the constitutional method of electing Senators. It will transfer the contest to our State conventions, the selection of a friendly governor being an essential prerequisite to a conspiracy to prevent a choice by the legislature. Let me suggest that if a political obstructionist, who may be disowned and repudiated by his party (and I want to be understood as not in any way alluding to Mr. Quay in what I say on this point), can gather around him a few men, controlled either by honorable or venal means, prevent a choice of Senator by the legislature, and then secure his own appointment by the governor, it will introduce into our State legislatures an element of endless and bitter discord.

If this can be done once, what is there to prevent it being done by the same man a second, a third, or a fourth time, thus keeping the representation of the State full by the choice of a man not selected in accordance with the plain provisions of the Constitution, a man not the choice of the people of his State or of his party, but a man who perpetuates himself in the Senate in opposition to the wishes of his own people and under a strained and indefensible construction of certain provisions of the Constitution of the United States? It naturally follows that when several men are contending for the Senatorship, there will be a great temptation for the one who possesses the governor's favor to refuse to make any compromise and, by maintaining a deadlock, secure the appointment to himself as soon as the legislature adjourns.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said on a former occasion, when a similar case was under discussion:

> Safety lies in the direction of a close adherence to constitutional methods. Neither a strained construction nor a loose construction of the organic law should govern our action. Let us insist that the State legislature shall perform its duty, and not attempt to transfer power to the executive which belongs to a coordinate branch of the State government.

I have but a single observation more to make. I have heretofore held to the opinion that electing Senators by the people is not desirable, but I am free to say that if the choice is to be made between popular vote and the appointment by governors I prefer the former. But there is, to my mind, a safer and better way than either, and that is the method prescribed by the Constitution, the method of electing Senators by the legislatures of the several States. For that I plead to-day, and notwithstanding claims to the contrary, I do not believe the Senate will reverse an unbroken line of precedents from 1825 to 1900. Addressing myself to those who are pressing Mr. Quay's claims, I am led to say that ours is the path of safety, yours the path of disorder and chaos; ours the constitutional way, yours a makeshift and an assumption, fraught with peril to the best interests of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator from Minnesota delay if any other Senator wishes to speak upon the pending matter.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly; I shall withdraw the motion if any other Senator wishes to speak.

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps we can have a vote upon my amendment to the resolution. Unless a Senator wishes to speak, there is no reason why we should not have a vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hardly think that there can be a vote at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator need not go further. There being no other Senator ready to speak, I ask that the resolution may go over until after the routine morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, without objection it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2335) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in and to the government of the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Alaska bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill known as the Alaska bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. I understand that the pending question is on the amendment presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. STEWART. I can not consent to going on with the Alaska bill now, because if the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is pressed it will necessarily take some time to argue it, and I want a full Senate when it is discussed, because I think I can show that that amendment takes the property of one man and gives it to another. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] also wants to be heard on the bill, and he is absent.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator that in order to make some progress I will present at this time certain formal amendments, two in number, which do not go to the merits of any controverted proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 6, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 5, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The following prayer was delivered by Rev. R. H. DOLLIVER, Methodist Episcopal Church, Rock River Conference, Illinois:

O God, our God, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth! We would not enter upon the business and deliberations of this day without invoking Thy blessing. We pray that Thou wilt bless the President of the United States and his counselors. We ask Thee to bless the two Houses of Congress, and grant that their proceedings may be guided and directed by a wisdom which will always come upon those who look for it and ask for it. We pray Thee to bless all the different departments and branches of this great Government. Let Thy blessing rest upon the whole country and the whole people; and may the principles which God has raised up this great nation to illustrate and exemplify spread throughout the earth, to the glory of Thy great name and to the good of humanity. And may the blessing of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost descend upon us all, and bring us all through this life, and crown us all at last with everlasting life, through Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill the title of which was read, as follows:

Senate bill 268, to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein, and the officers thereof, and the disposition of pending causes.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with the information that the Senate has nonconcurred in the amendment of the House and asks for a conference.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. ALEXANDER, and Mr. LANHAM as conferees on the part of the House.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to present from the Committee on Appropriations the privileged report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will allow me a moment. This is a unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations. It covers items of urgent deficiency amounting to $405,000, and I am authorized by the committee to ask the unanimous consent of the House for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10449) was read a first and second time, and the House proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1900, and for other objects hereinafter stated, namely:

UNITED STATES COURTS.

For payment of salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, $165,000, to include payments for services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise.

For fees of jurors, $55,000.

For fees of witnesses, $155,000.

For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, for the United States courts and their officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records, $30,000.

The unexpended balance of the sum of $100,000, appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act for the erection of United States prisons and for the imprisonment of United States prisoners, and for other purposes," to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General in the fitting of workshops for the employment of prisoners, and the unexpended balance of the sum of $15,000, appropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1898, to enable the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior to have prepared plans, specifications, and estimates, and for expenses connected with the selection of a prison site south of the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude and east of the Rocky Mountains, are hereby made available in addition to and for the same purposes as the sum of $500,000 appropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1899, for the erection, complete, of a United States penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., and for expenses incident thereto, the same to continue available until expended.

NOTE.—Total amount appropriated by this bill, $405,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 10450) was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desire to present the views of a minority of the committee upon this bill, and ask that they be printed with the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and resumed consideration of the bill (S. 222) to provide a government in the Territory of Hawaii, with Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration, under the five-minute rule, of the Senate bill which the Clerk will report to the committee.

The Clerk, under the order made yesterday, proceeded to read the substitute in the nature of an amendment, by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITIZENSHIP.

SEC. 4. That all persons who were citizens of the Republic of Hawaii on August 12, 1898, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States and citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

And all citizens of the United States who were resident in the Hawaiian Islands on or since August 12, 1898, and all the citizens of the United States who shall hereafter reside in the Territory of Hawaii for one year shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee, I move to strike out that section. I would like to know who were citizens of the republic of Hawaii at the time mentioned.

Mr. KNOX. The laws of the republic of Hawaii provided that all persons born or naturalized in Hawaii, under the republic of Hawaii, should be citizens of the republic of Hawaii. At that time they comprised the same persons whom we now make citizens—the English, Germans, Americans, native Hawaiians, and Portuguese—with the exception that there have been under the monarchy about 700 Chinese naturalized, about 350 of whom only remain, the rest having gone back; so that the only Asiatic citizenship is composed of about 350 naturalized Chinese.

Mr. McRAE. Do you adopt them as citizens?

Mr. KNOX. I will state, further, that in order to prevent further naturalization of Asiatics the constitution of Hawaii provided that they should naturalize citizens of nations which by their laws provided for the naturalization of Hawaiians. As there were no such nations, it excluded from that time the naturalization of Chinese.

Mr. McRAE. But that would put it in the power of foreign nations to naturalize people for our country, would it not?

Mr. KNOX. The moment this bill passes, of course that law of the republic of Hawaii ends and the laws of the United States extend.

Mr. McRAE. Do you directly repeal that provision?

Mr. KNOX. All laws in contradistinction to the Constitution and laws of the United States are repealed by the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Do you by this bill adopt the 350 naturalized Chinese who were in Hawaii at the time of the passage of the resolution annexing the islands?

Mr. KNOX. Those 350, inasmuch as——

Mr. McRAE. You adopt them as United States citizens?

Mr. KNOX. Inasmuch as we could not draw the line, we made a general provision making all citizens of the republic of Hawaii citizens of the United States, and that would include those 350 Chinese.

Mr. McRAE. Is the anti-alien contract-labor law extended to Hawaii by this bill?

Mr. KNOX. Yes; all the laws of the United States are so extended, and the law prohibiting these contracts and the penal provision is retained by this bill; but there is to be a subsequent amendment further extending it so as to make it absolutely certain that we stamp out every vestige of contract labor.

Mr. McRAE. I am not quite certain that that is done.

Mr. KNOX. There is an amendment prepared which stamps out every vestige of that contract-labor system.

Mr. McRAE. At the proper time I should like to move a new paragraph in the bill which will beyond all question extend the anti-alien contract-labor law.

Mr. KNOX. It will be an amendment to section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the formal amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas will be withdrawn.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at this time I think it would be proper for me to make a brief statement.

My judgment is that this is one of the most important bills that has been presented to the House since I have been a member.

The Committee on Territories have for days and weeks given careful attention and consideration to this bill. At the time of the introduction of the bill into the House a like bill was introduced into the Senate. Differences of opinion among the members of the committees have resulted in very many changes in the original bills introduced into the respective Houses and a remodeling and recasting of many of the sections. The Senate considered a bill of the import of the bill now before the House and the amendments to it for nine days. With the exception of three set speeches they considered the bill by sections. During that time they covered 108 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the discussion of the amendments and sections of this bill.

We must now, perforce, in something like three or four hours, do all the work in consideration and debating of the bill that was done by the Senate in over a week. The committee have been careful, but differences of opinion have arisen. It was almost impossible to understand the industrial conditions of Hawaii, almost impossible to get information on the subject of its judicial and other matters. The result is there are differences of opinion now on various sections as to their meaning and interpretation.

The Senate, after mature deliberation, have passed a bill which to my mind is far less objectionable and more perfect than the provisions of this bill presented to the House. The misfortune is that many of the important sections involving the question of appointments by the Territorial governor or by the President, involving the question of the establishment of courts and procedure, are at the end of this bill.

I might say that I feel that the chairman of the Committee on Territories, every member of that committee and every member of the House, want to do the very best they can for the people of Hawaii, and desire to send a bill to the Senate to consider and to the people of those islands to govern them that will be as nearly perfect as possible, because those people have troubles enough of their own. Now, if we proceed to the consideration of the sections of this bill and confine ourselves to the subject-matter involved, we may possibly complete the work in four hours. If we succeed in doing that, then my hope that we may be able to pass the bill without a division may be answered. There are sections though, at the end of the bill, which we should reach, very important, and amendments to them will be presented.

To the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] I will say that the Senate amendment of Senator PETTIGREW to section 10 of this House bill should be adopted. I conversed with Senator NELSON and other Senators yesterday, and they favor that amendment; and if it should pass this House with that amendment I am assured that it will pass the Senate. That amendment will wipe out forever all vestige of the foreign labor contract system and destroy that system entirely. That comes early in the bill; and if the committee do not offer the proper amendment, which I believe they will, I shall offer the Senate provision upon that subject.

But it is due to the committee, due to the House, and due to the people of Hawaii that we should confine our discussion upon this subject to the provision of the bill, and I urge upon members to do that because of the limited time. If the discussion is limited to the provisions of this bill, we can do our duty, and in my judgment send a good bill to the Senate. We will thus avoid the unfortunate condition that comes, too often, unfortunately, when we legislate by conference.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I heartily second all that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] has said, and I hope that the discussion to-day will be confined to the material sections and the material amendments that are to be offered.

It is true, as the gentleman says, that there are important amendments to be offered to the very last sections of this bill. I hope we shall not be obliged to make the point of order against irrelevant discussion. While we desire the freest discussion upon all important matters, it is of great importance that the discussion be confined to the material questions which are before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the formal amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

APPLICATION OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

SEC. 5. That except as herein otherwise provided the Constitution and all the laws of the United States locally applicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States: Provided, That sections 1850 and 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "the Constitution and" on lines 24 and 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 52, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "the Constitution and."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to detain the committee upon this question. It is simply a proposition to take from the section that part of it which purports to extend the Constitution to the Hawaiian Islands, leaving it to extend the laws so far as they are applicable.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have order. I can not hear at this distance the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen will cease conversation and resume their seats.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The section as it stands, Mr. Chairman, purports to extend to Hawaii not only the laws of the United States locally applicable, but the Constitution. The section, if the amendment I propose were adopted, would extend to that Territory the laws of the United States locally applicable and leave the Constitution to take care of itself. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy the time of the House in anything like an extended argument on the proposition involved in the amendment. My belief is that either the Constitution will be embodied in the act as statute law and carried to Hawaii in that way if the section remains unamended or there will be absolutely no effect, nothing accomplished, by the incorporation of those words.

What argument can be made by gentlemen for the retention of these words, except that it will be taken as an evidence that in order to carry the Constitution to Hawaii, or make it effective there, it becomes necessary to have this Congressional action? That the inhabitants of these islands will have more or less of the protection of the Constitution, in consequence of the passage or failure to pass this provision, I do not believe; but that the presence of these words in this section will be used elsewhere and at other times and upon other questions to propagate what to me seems a dangerous heresy, I do not doubt. Now, if there is a good reason why these words should remain, I would be very glad for some gentleman to state it.

If it be seriously contended that in the absence of these words the laws of the United States will be carried to Hawaii, while the Constitution will have no force and effect there, I would be exceedingly glad if some gentleman would point out how and why that is or could be. If it be true that the inhabitants of those islands and the islands themselves will be under the force and effect of the Constitution just the same without this legislation "extending" the Constitution as with it, the words which I move to strike out are useless, and, under existing circumstances, misleading. Why do that which may be called a "precedent," for legislation which ought not to be enacted, at some other time and concerning some other territory?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, this is section 5. I was unfortunate enough not be able to hear the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. The amendment he has offered is to page 52 of the bill, section 5, on lines 24 and 25, which provides:

SEC. 5. That except as herein otherwise provided the Constitution and all the laws of the United States locally applicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States: Provided, That sections 1850 and 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the Territory of Hawaii.

Now, the gentleman moves to strike out the words "the Constitution and," upon the ground, as I understand it, of the doctrine which he advocates, and which so largely prevails among gentlemen upon the other side of the House, and to some extent among gentlemen upon this side of the House, that the Constitution goes to our island possessions by its own inherent force and without this provision. Now, we have had a very liberal time allowed in this House for the discussion of that question, with ample opportunity for every gentleman entertaining views upon that subject to express his views. I believe, with many others, that the Constitution does not go there except it goes by legislative enactment or by treaty. Other gentlemen believe the other way.

Mr. NEVILLE. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEVILLE. Who will decide what portions of the Constitution are locally applicable to the Hawaiian Islands, and under what authority will that tribunal act in so deciding?

Mr. KNOX. What portion of the Constitution and laws extended are applicable to the island will be a question for litigation in the courts. By this bill there is a court established with Federal jurisdiction alone to deal with all these questions that come up in Hawaii.

Now, then, the point I make is this, and the only point; for I do not wish to precipitate a discussion upon this bill upon the Constitution, because if the contention of the gentleman from Missouri is right, and the Constitution extends by its inherent force to the islands of Hawaii, then no harm is done by extending it by this section. It is simply declaratory.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. KNOX. Yes, indeed.

Mr. COX. I just simply want to follow the question asked. You say that there will be a court in Hawaii to establish this question. That court decides how far it is applicable. Is that a final decision, and no appeal lies from that?

Mr. KNOX. We establish a Federal district court with a jurisdiction of the circuit court, that upon constitutional questions appeal may be had and a writ of error may lie to the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no question but that any constitutional question arising there will go to the United States court for decision.

Now, then, I say again that if the contention of these gentlemen is right, no harm is done by this provision. It is simply declaratory. Shall we plunge the people of these islands into uncertainty as to what the laws are that apply to that island? Shall we raise at once questions of doubtful jurisdiction, questions that start with litigation which will imperil every right of property, that will block every step of progress, because men can not act unless the question of the laws that apply to the territory and the country in which they live are settled to a certainty?

Mr. HITT was recognized.

Mr. POWERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. HITT. I will yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. I wish to inquire whether under this bill the people of Hawaii are citizens of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. POWERS. I ask that his time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes?

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not ask for the time, and I ask to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. KNOX. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Vermont.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNOX. They are citizens.

Mr. POWERS. Inasmuch as you declare that the people of the islands are citizens of the United States, can you not obviate the objection proposed by the gentleman from Missouri by simply adding a further provision after declaring them citizens of the United States, that they shall be entitled to all the rights, immunities, and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes; but there are other questions that arise besides those of citizenship. Those are not the only questions.

Mr. POWERS. I understand my friend from Missouri claims that we can not legislate the Constitution into Hawaii, and I very much doubt the proposition.

Mr. KNOX. Well, I respect the doubt of the gentleman from Vermont, and I say that we do not propose to raise the question.

Mr. POWERS. I recognize the right of Congress to declare that these people shall have all the immunities and privileges of citizens of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. They are citizens of the United States by this bill, and the Constitution and laws are extended as far as they are applicable to these islands. Now, one further consideration.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. KNOX. I will.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to ask the gentleman what parts of the Constitution he regards as locally applicable to Hawaii and what parts he regards as not locally applicable?

Mr. KNOX. It is perfectly apparent, Mr. Chairman, that I can not answer that question in one hour, two hours, or three hours. The Constitution and body of the law that is locally applicable to the Territory of Hawaii are extended to the islands by this bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. One question further. Can the gentleman indicate any provision of the Constitution not locally applicable to Hawaii?

Mr. KNOX. The provision as to electing Presidential electors, as to determining the succession, and very many constitutional questions can be cited.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let me ask another question. Can he mention any provision applicable to the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico that is not applicable to the Territory of Hawaii?

Mr. KNOX. I should suppose that there were many provisions applicable to a great maritime republic like Hawaii that would not be applicable to Arizona or New Mexico. For instance, the provision of Article IV of the Constitution if I have the number of the article in my mind right, that the jurisdiction of the United States courts shall extend to all questions of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction. That would not be claimed as applicable to an inland Territory like Arizona, but would be exactly applicable to the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Can the gentleman point to the provision in the Constitution that gives authority to extend it in pieces or parts to any Territory, or any part of a Territory?

Mr. KNOX. I think I can.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to have the gentleman do it.

Mr. KNOX. I will cite the gentleman to the Revised Statutes, Title XXIII, chapter 1, section 1891, which says:

The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized territory or in every Territory hereafter organized as elsewhere in the United States.

Now, either all the Congresses that have sat in this Hall from 1850, when the Territory of New Mexico was organized, have believed that the Constitution did not go to the Territories of its own force, but must be extended by an act of Congress, or else that declaration of the Revised Statutes is mere empty babble and boys' play.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. DE ARMOND, there were—ayes 65, noes 77.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. KNOX were appointed.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McRAE. I move to amend by striking out the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 2, page 53, and ending with the word "Hawaii," in the fifth line, same page.

The Clerk read the words proposed to be struck out, as follows:

Provided, That sections 1850 and 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason why the sections named in this proviso which apply to other Territories of the United States should not apply to Hawaii. The first of the sections cited—section 1850 of the Revised Statutes—is as follows:

All laws passed by the legislative assembly and governor of any Territory, except in the Territories of Colorado, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, shall be submitted to Congress, and if disapproved shall be null and of no effect.

The other and more important section referred to in this proviso is as follows:

SEC. 1890. No corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes shall acquire or hold real estate in any Territory, during the existence of the Territorial government, of a greater value than $50,000; and all real estate acquired or held by such corporation or association contrary hereto shall be forfeited and escheat to the United States; but existing vested rights in real estate shall not be impaired by the provisions of this section.

Now, sir, I can not understand why these laws, which are applicable to other Territories, should not be applicable to Hawaii. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] can give any good reason for exempting Hawaii from the operation of these provisions, I should like to hear it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, there are at the present time in Hawaii a number of charitable institutions now possessing larger amounts of real estate than section 1890 permits to be held by a religious or charitable institution in the Territories heretofore established. According to the universal testimony—testimony to which there is no dissent—these institutions in Hawaii are now doing a very great and noble charitable work.

It was thought not wise to extend to those institutions the provisions which the gentleman has read, either as to property which these institutions of Hawaii now hold or as to that which they may hereafter acquire. Very careful examination was made in regard to all these institutions. I have a list of them here, which it would take some time to read; but according to the universal testimony they are all of a commendable, unsectarian character, and are engaged in performing the highest class of charitable work.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, it is against the theory and policy of this Government to permit large landed estates to be held by religious and charitable institutions; and as this has been our policy with respect to all Territories in the old United States, I think our new possessions should not be exempt from this rule.

Mr. KNOX. The gentleman will allow me to suggest what I think is possibly an answer to his objection. When we have formed Territories heretofore, they have always been sparsely settled, generally inhabited largely by the natives or aborigines. In the present case the conditions are entirely different from those which have existed in respect to Territories formerly organized, conditions which lay at the foundation of the provisions of law heretofore applicable to such Territories.

In the present case we have an ancient country, embracing a monarchy that has existed for years and a republic that is already four years old. Charitable institutions have grown up there; and we have in that respect a condition that has never existed in any of our Territories formed under the Constitution heretofore. Hence it seems to us neither proper nor necessary that the same provisions which have been extended to other Territories should be applied to Hawaii.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I ask that his time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I think that the sooner the people of Hawaii learn that the religious or charitable institutions now existing there, however laudable and worthy they may be, must be divorced from their government and that the old conditions can not continue the better it will be for them. I do not agree that as a matter of Government policy we should continue to permit any associations of the character contemplated to acquire unlimited amounts of real estate that go untaxed. The true rule is that no such institutions should own more real estate than is necessary for the actual use of them.

Now, this section, from which this exemption is sought, protects all vested rights up to this time; but it permits them to go on acquiring real estate indefinitely and large sums of money without limit, all free from all taxes, and the sooner we stop this the better. So I hope that the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept the amendment, but if he does not, that the House will vote for the amendment and let this Territory stand exactly on the same footing as other Territories.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. HAMILTON. I can make a statement which will make plain to the gentleman——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, was I recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. No member of the committee appearing to desire the floor, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield, then, to the gentleman from Michigan for a moment.

Mr. HAMILTON. Perhaps I can be of assistance to the gentleman in throwing some light upon the subject. There are several institutions which are of charitable or educational nature, among which should be first named the Lunalilo Trust. This trust was established under the will of King Lunalilo, who devised all of his property to establish a home for indigent Hawaiians. Under the provisions of his will the Lunalilo Home was established and has been in operation for about fifteen years.

The property which Lunalilo left consisted mainly of tracts of land in various parts of the islands, which at the time were not of very great value, and he directed that when the property became of the value of $25,000, the home should be established, his views being that if his property was sufficient to establish the home, the maintenance of it would have to be provided largely by the public. The value of the lands, however, increased very much, and now the home, which was established at a cost of over $30,000, has been maintained for a number of years, and the funds derived from the proceeds of the sale of the land amount to over $200,000, which are invested in securities subject to approval by the judges of the supreme court.

This institution has proved of great benefit to the aged and dependent Hawaiians.

Second. The Princess Pauahi Bishop devised her property, consisting of a large number of lands, for the establishment of industrial schools for the education of Hawaiian boys and girls, also making provision for certain charities. Later, and after her death, her husband, the Hon. Charles R. Bishop, made large provisions by various deeds of trust for the establishment of a museum, and also for aiding the various charitable organizations in the islands. The property devised by Mr. Bishop for these charitable and scientific purposes is now worth more than $1,000,000 and will probably increase in value. These institutions, maintained by the munificent provisions made by these friends of the Hawaiian race, are of the greatest value to those people.

Third. The Young Men's Christian Association of Honolulu owns property in excess of $30,000 in value and is an undenominational organization exercising a great influence for good in that community.

Fourth. Efforts are being made in Honolulu to establish a home for incurables. The public hospital in Honolulu, known as the Queen's Hospital, can not receive persons afflicted with consumption or other similar incurable diseases, and the need for a home for such persons is becoming very great.

Consumption is not very prevalent among the natives of the country, but many people come to that climate hoping to recover their health. Many of these people have limited means, and some of them have no more than sufficient to enable them to reach the islands. The care of these people devolves upon the residents of the islands, and the responsibility has reached a stage where it is deemed necessary that a home should be provided for them.

Funds or endowment sufficient to provide an income to maintain such an institution would have to be more than $50,000.

The insular and isolated situation of the islands is such that the responsibility for the care of the helpless is perhaps more pressing than in many other communities, and it certainly would seem to be unwise to provide by statute that organizations established for such purposes should be restricted in the amount of the means which may be provided for their maintenance.

Mr. McRAE. Just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McRAE. I am as much in favor——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. It will only take a moment to say what I want to say. I am as much in favor of missionary work and charitable institutions as anyone can be. I believe firmly in the Christian religion, but I want it kept separate from governmental affairs——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that he understood that it was the time of the gentleman from Michigan which was extended.

Mr. McRAE. I understood the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. HAMILTON. I have no time to yield, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is recognized.

Mr. McRAE. I hope I may be permitted to finish my sentence.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas one minute.

Mr. McRAE. I thought the gentleman from Michigan had five minutes given to him by the committee and that he yielded to me.

Mr. HAMILTON. Very well. Let the gentleman from Arkansas conclude.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order for gentlemen under the five-minute rule to yield time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What becomes of my request for unanimous consent, that was granted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the request of the gentleman from Indiana to be that the time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] be extended.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the error of the Chair, then. For the purpose of bringing the matter back to its proper place——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is now recognized and has the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. I want to say that while I am in favor of religious and charitable institutions, and while I am a firm believer in the Christian religion and all proper missionary work, I do not believe it is right for those who entertain the same opinions to tax those who do not agree with us for the support of such institutions or to exempt large estates held by them to be relieved from all taxes. If you want to teach the people of Hawaii the fundamental principles of government, you must divorce religion and government. Missionaries must understand that their work should be confined to spiritual matters and not to acquiring large estates and hold them free of taxes for the support of the Government.

The statement of the gentleman from Michigan shows large accumulations of money, running up into the millions already. The complaint that these poor people make to-day is against the questionable methods of some missionaries who went to the country for the alleged purpose of benefiting them spiritually, but who took advantage of their ignorance to get title to their lands. Many of those people claim that they have been robbed and mistreated by alleged missionaries, and now you propose to exempt the estates thus acquired from taxes and thus enable these people to accumulate great fortunes without any limitation. If they own more property than is absolutely necessary for use as churches and charitable institutions, the excess should be taxed; but such concerns should not own more.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I concur with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] in his amendment, the purpose of which, as I understand it, is to prevent these charitable and religious associations from holding real estate in excess of the value of $50,000. That limitation is the one which is now contained in the general law of the United States regarding Territories, which this Territorial act seeks to repeal so far as Hawaii is concerned.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me finish this sentence, please.

Section 1890 of the Revised Statutes provides that existing vested rights in real estate shall not be impaired by the provisions of this section.

Mr. HITT. At what date was that act passed?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is section 1890 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HITT. That applies to institutions in existence the day that act was approved.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I should like to ask the gentleman upon what principle vested rights are protected unless the Constitution is there? If we have absolute power to act and legislate for those islands, what principle protects vested rights?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, so far as I am concerned, I am not one of those who believe in the theory that the Constitution does not apply to the Territory of Hawaii.

Whether it applies or not, I imagine that the disposition of Congress would be to protect vested rights; and if, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] intimates, only those vested rights existing at the time of the enactment of this section 1890 of the Revised Statutes are recognized, we can certainly insert a provision in this bill which will recognize vested rights now existing.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I do wish to reach—I have only a few minutes, and then I will answer questions—what I do wish to meet is the tendency toward land monopoly in these new possessions that have been acquired, and we ought to meet it with reference to Hawaii, we ought to meet it with reference to Puerto Rico, and if we are ever called upon to legislate in regard to the Philippines we ought to meet it with reference to those islands at the very threshold of legislation. The insurrection in the Philippine Islands was not so much a protest against Spain and is not to-day so much a protest against the United States as it is against a system of land monopoly which has grown up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNOX. Now, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is a protest against a system of land monopoly that has grown up in the Philippine Islands, of which the religious organizations of those islands are the beneficiaries. Now, that is a question as old as time; and if we look at the economic causes of most of the wars that have visited the world, we will find at the bottom of almost every war a protest against the monopoly of land. It led to the French Revolution. The land of France prior to the revolution was held one-third by the nobility, one-third by the church, and the other, and the poorer third, was held by the masses of the people, and the taxes were all imposed on the poorer third. That it was that led to the revolution of blood and carnival of destruction. Puerto Rico to-day is one of the most thickly inhabited islands in the world—a million of people occupying an island 100 miles long and 40 miles wide.

The holdings of the land in that island to-day are comparatively small; but freer trade with the United States and the commercial advantage gained by access to our markets will give a great advance to the value of those lands, and we will see a gradual centralization and concentration of ownership in the hands of a few, unless we restrain it now. If we do not guard it by legislation, we will have 900,000 or a million people on those islands without a foot of land which they can call their own, all of them serfs attached to the soil, subject to the control of the landlords.

The reason why the war in the Philippines is being waged to-day is that vast tracts of land are held by the religious organizations of Luzon, in whose hands they have been gradually concentrated, and the Filipinos, though devoted to the church, have been in repeated revolts against this system and have demanded its reform. They are at war with the United States largely because they believe that our Government will maintain and protect this monopoly, and their resistance would be greatly diminished and the islands would be speedily pacified if an assurance were to-day given that efforts would be made to relax that land monopoly, not by confiscation of the land, as the Filipinos themselves intended to do, and as has been accomplished in almost every Latin country—in all the South American Republics, all the Central American Republics, in Mexico, and in Italy itself—but by a condemnation of those lands to public use, through a judicial tribunal organized for that purpose, adequate compensation to the owners being assured, by issuing bonds at a low rate of interest and for a long period of time for their payment, the lands to be thrown open to the Filipinos in small tracts, to be paid for on long time and at low rates of interest. This is the economic cause of this war, and the best way of pacifying those islands is to meet, in our legislation here, conditions of land monopoly that exist there by wise action regarding it.

Now, so far as the Hawaiian Islands are concerned, the tendency there is toward land monopoly. The tendency always is to employ in these semitropical countries either slave labor or semislave labor. There the lands have been drifting into large holdings. We should in this very bill limit the number of acres which any corporation should hold; and if any existing corporations hold land in excess of the limit, we should by some just provision, extending over a period, compel the disposition of those lands by sale, so that this land monopoly may be broken up, otherwise we will have——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks that his time be extended two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Otherwise we will have in the Hawaiian Islands an oligarchy stronger than the one that has existed there in the past, with an absolute monopoly of the lands in the hands of the few, and an abject, servile population, incapable of resisting oppression or of exercising the rights of freemen. It does seem to me that in our initial legislation, intended to meet the conditions of these islands, where the present tendency toward land monopoly is great and where the tendency will be greater as the value of these lands rise, as the trade with this country increases, we ought to make a provision here and we ought to extend this wise provision of the general law applying to all Territories hitherto admitted into the Union to Hawaii, coupling it with such a provision as will protect existing vested rights.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad in my time to have the attention of the gentleman, in the shape of a question and a remark at the same time. I am quite in harmony with him as to his general views; but here is a statute that absolutely prohibits a charitable organization from having more than $50,000 worth in a Territory.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, we can increase the limit.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if that law were enforced in a State, or in the District of Columbia, such an institution as the Louise Home, founded by Mr. Corcoran, could not exist, and at once all the property of that home over and above $50,000 would escheat to the United States; and so of many others all over the States and in the gentleman's own State of Nevada. Now, in the Sandwich Islands, as I understand and was informed when I was there for a few days three or four years ago, they have a number of very worthy charities that speak much for the head and hearts of the people who formerly had possessions there, who left testamentary bequests. I think it would be a great hardship for them if they were eliminated. The gentleman from Michigan referred to them.

Now, while I have no objection to a limitation, I believe in making that limitation it ought to be placed beyond question that the present charities, especially those referred to by the gentleman from Michigan, that are real charities, should not be interfered with. Subject to that observation, I would be glad with my vote to cooperate with the gentleman, and I would be glad to know what he thinks of the proposition about making an exception in the case of these real charities.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I agree with him that all vested rights should be protected. So far as Hawaii is concerned, I do not understand that the monopoly of land by religious organizations has grown to any very large proportions. What we want to do is to prevent anything of that kind in the future.

Now, then, this statute of 1890 does protect all that these religious and beneficial corporations have now. As to the limitations of the future, I am willing to make it $100,000 or $150,000. It should be recollected that the limitation only applies to real estate. Such corporations can hold bonds, stocks, and other personal property without limit.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I thought the statute, as he says, would apply to these institutions, but my colleague, Mr. HITT, says the vested rights preserved in the statute of 1890 are vested rights which were in existence at the time of the enactment of that law. The enactment of that law was at the time of the revision, as I recollect, of the statutes in the early seventies; so that where property has been acquired since that time in Hawaii it would not be saved by this provision. I think the gentleman and myself both agree that we do not want to interfere with those charities as they exist to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I quite agree with the gentleman that the amendment ought to be carefully framed. Section 1890 is contained in a general law regarding Territorial government, and provides that religious corporations shall not hold real estate in excess of $50,000, but that it shall not affect vested rights. I imagine that that would not be held to affect rights which were vested at the time of the passage of this bill.

Mr. KNOX. But, if the gentleman will allow me a suggestion, the statute says "existing vested rights." I think, as a matter of law, it would be held that section 1890 did not apply.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, we can change it so that it will not affect rights existing to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer a substitute at this time for that proviso in section 5?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose an amendment to strike out the whole section?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I propose to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order until the section is perfected.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, we want to reach the evil, and I am willing to modify my amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman, myself, which I think will overcome the difficulty. It is that section 1850 shall not operate so as to disturb vested rights in the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the section is 1890; I think that is the one that the gentleman intends.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois and make it 1890. I did not have the number of the section before me. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I am not disturbed about vested rights, because I believe the Constitution is there to protect them, but there can be no objection to the passage of this substitute, which would carry that section into these islands so as to prevent hereafter any violation of its provisions; if the proviso were adopted, it would not disturb vested rights.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, if I can be permitted to modify my amendment, I will do so. I see no particular necessity for striking out section 1850. So I would strike out all after the word "and," in section 3, down to the end of the paragraph, and insert "but section 1890 of the Revised Statutes shall apply and is hereby reenacted as of this date."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send the amendment to the desk to be reported by the Clerk?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Clerk read the section as it is proposed to be when amended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "fifty" in line 3, page 53, down to and including the word "Hawaii," and insert "but section 1890 shall apply to the Territory of Hawaii, and is hereby reenacted as of this date."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Arkansas desires to withdraw the amendment first proposed by him?

Mr. McRAE. I desire to modify my amendment, as indicated in the proposition just read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment as first proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman that he insert the words "of the Revised Statutes of the United States" after the words "section 1890."

Mr. McRAE. Certainly. I intended to make that modification.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the Chair may understand exactly the parliamentary status, he desires to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] whether his proposition was to insert the words sent to the desk as a proviso to the section or to strike out some part of the proviso as printed and insert the language he proposes?

Mr. SNODGRASS. My object is to substitute the proviso which I send to the desk for the proviso reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas will be first in order.

Mr. MORRIS. I should like to have the proviso read as it will read after the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas is adopted, if it should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the proviso in that form:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the proviso so as to read:
"Provided, That section 1850 and section 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to the Territory of Hawaii, and is hereby reenacted as of this date."

Mr. MORRIS. The gentleman from Arkansas will allow me to suggest that the language is incomplete, and should read that "Section 1850 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the Territory of Hawaii; but section 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to the Territory of Hawaii, and is hereby reenacted as of this date."

Mr. McRAE. That is correct and as I intended. By inadvertence my amendment as drawn struck out more words than I intended should be, and I modify it as suggested, and thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, as modified.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to accept that amendment?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. But I hope the gentleman will let us have a vote.

Mr. FINLEY. I should like to state this: If the purpose of this amendment was to put an end to the land monopoly in Hawaii, I would vote for it.

Mr. KNOX. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] will allow me, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. I am not in favor of the amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

Mr. FINLEY. As I have stated, if the purpose of this amendment was to put an end to land monopoly in the Hawaiian Islands—a monopoly which now exists, not by religious and charitable institutions, but by speculators and capitalists—I would heartily support the amendment. But, Mr. Chairman, this is not the case, and I submit that the amendment should not prevail. The same reasons which make it necessary to limit the holdings of real property by religious and charitable organizations in the Territories of the United States do not apply to the Hawaiian Islands. Our existing Territories are undeveloped, so to speak. Not so with the Hawaiian Islands. They come to us a sovereign State at the time of annexation—not only a sovereign State, but one developed, with an abundant population and with institutions which exist much the same in all respects as institutions of our older States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is more necessity for religious and charitable institutions in the Hawaiian Islands than there is in any Territory of the United States, because, situated as those islands are on the highway of travel between Asia and the two Americas, all the plagues and different forms of disease to which man is heir find a lodgment there.

Those people suffer in many ways from diseases and plagues, making it necessary to have hospitals and institutions of a charitable nature which do not exist in the Territories of the United States.

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman urging this amendment, would a provision of this kind be applicable in the State of New York, in the State of Arkansas, in the State of Maine, or in the State of South Carolina? Is it not true that in almost every State of this Union there are charitable institutions for the purpose of administering to the wants and relieving the sufferings of the afflicted having a much larger capital than $50,000?

I can see no reason for not exempting the Hawaiian Islands from the provisions of section 1890, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate upon this section is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section is exhausted under the rule. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. McRAE and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 29.

Mr. McRAE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, ten members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. McRAE was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I now move——

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, is debate exhausted upon that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to be heard upon it for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, in answer to what was said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] a moment ago, this amendment would not interfere with any vested rights in the Territory of Hawaii. That is the first thing to be considered.

It would not interfere with vested rights, even without the saving clause of this amendment, which says that it shall not do so. It could not, because the courts would not permit it to do so.

The second consideration that presents itself to my mind is this: I admit that the situation in Hawaii is somewhat different from that of the other Territories of the United States. It is, as the gentleman has said, upon the thoroughfare where diseases from the Orient first make their approach. But there is nothing in the amendment that would interfere with public hospitals. They are not religious or charitable corporations within the sense of the law.

Mr. KNOX. Are they not charitable institutions?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not in the sense of the legal phrase when they are public and maintained by the government of the Territory or by the State. No court has ever held that they fell within the inhibition against charitable corporations.

Now, there are out there, and there always will be, hospitals, with immense endowments, under the charge of the state, so to speak, although the state has now become a Territory of the United States—in other words, governmental institutions. This does not apply to them.

Now, the gentleman said a moment ago that this same sort of a law would not do for the States. But it is a matter within our knowledge that nearly all the States in the Union have laws limiting the amount of land which may be owned and controlled by charitable and religious corporations. Not only is it a fact that most of the States now have such laws—doubtless the gentleman's own State; mine, at any rate—but it is a fact that one of the fundamental principles of the English law is the statute of mortmain, and it is a matter of the very highest public policy that land especially should not fall into the possession, control, and title of "dead hands," as the law calls it.

Now, this amendment having done away with some of the objections of the other one, namely, having expressly saved the point of interfering with existing institutions, it seems to me that all reasonable opposition which can be made to it has disappeared.

I want to call the attention of the committee to another feature. Following section 1890 of the Revised Statutes is section 1891, which makes section 1890 applicable to "all the Territories hereafter to be created." So that if you make 1890 inapplicable to Hawaii, but leave 1891 upon the statute book, it seems to me that you may raise a question of law that it is unnecessary to raise. So that if the House is going to render section 1890 inapplicable, then it ought to go further and render section 1891 inapplicable. But I believe that both ought to be applicable to the Territory of Hawaii, as well as to the other Territories of the United States, first saving all question about existing institutions and vested rights, which saving is made by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KNOX. I make the point that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I did not occupy my full five minutes when I offered the amendment.

Mr. KNOX. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I only want three or four minutes.

Mr. KNOX. I move that debate on this section close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that all debate on this section close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the section which this bill intends to make inoperative in Hawaii is section 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

SEC. 1890. No corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes shall acquire or hold real estate in any Territory, during the existence of the Territorial government, of a greater value than $50,000; and all real estate acquired or held by such corporation or association contrary hereto shall be forfeited and escheat to the United States; but existing vested rights in real estate shall not be impaired by the provisions of this section.

Now, as I stated at the outset, I believe that the Constitution is there to protect vested rights; but if the contention of gentlemen on the other side is true that whatever law Congress may enact is absolute in the Territory of Hawaii, then I assume that this provision, providing that this section shall not apply to Hawaii, is for the sole purpose of preventing the confiscation of the property that is held by religious or charitable institutions. As I say, I do not apprehend that danger, because I think the Constitution is there to protect such property; but if it is not there, then it is absolutely essential that some such provision be enacted, because otherwise, if the laws of the United States go there with this section, the property so held above the limit would be confiscated.

The amendment that I offer will carry those provisions of the laws of the United States there, this section included, but will provide that this shall not operate so as to disturb existing rights, but the section will be there for the purpose of circumscribing the amount of property that may be held hereafter by any institution now existing there or that may hereafter go there. I think its terms are sufficiently protected so that it ought to be adopted, and allow this section to go there with the others, so as to prevent other institutions, which may be there now, or which go there hereafter, acquiring the title to the whole of these lands and establishing monopolies. So I think my amendment ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SNODGRASS and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 34.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 16 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. SNODGRASS was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] sent to the desk an amendment to this section, which has not been read; for the information of the committee the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 24, section 5, the words "except as herein otherwise provided" and insert the same words after the words "United States," in line 25 of the same section, and insert a comma after the word "Constitution," in line 25 of the same section.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, that was intended to meet this situation. The gentleman from Tennessee and a number of others on this side of the House contend that the provision——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts debate on this section has been closed.

Mr. BARTLETT. On what?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. On the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On the section.

Mr. KNOX. Do you consider this anything more than a mere verbal amendment?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. KNOX. A matter of substance?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so.

Mr. KNOX. And that by inadvertence or by accident it was not presented?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] wrote it and sent it to the desk for the purpose of presenting it, and while the discussion was going on he went out, and will be back in a moment. I know he intends to present it, and he sent it to the desk for the purpose of having it pending. I ask permission to finish my statement.

Mr. KNOX. I do not like to object to anything that went out by a misunderstanding.

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not say it went out by a misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The section might be passed over until the return of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KNOX. Pass it until he returns. I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that this section be passed for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONSTRUCTION OF EXISTING STATUTES.

SEC. 10. That all obligations, contracts, rights of action, suits at law and in equity, prosecutions, and judgments existing prior to the taking effect of this act shall continue to be as effectual as if this act had not been passed; and those in favor of or against the republic of Hawaii, and not assumed by or transferred to the United States, shall be equally valid in favor of or against the government of the Territory of Hawaii. All offenses which by statute then in force were punishable as offenses against the republic of Hawaii shall be punishable as offenses against the government of the Territory of Hawaii unless such statute is inconsistent with this act, or shall be repealed or changed by law. All criminal and penal proceedings then pending in the courts of the republic of Hawaii shall be prosecuted to final judgment and execution in the name of the Territory of Hawaii; all such proceedings, all actions at law, suits in equity, and other proceedings then pending in the courts of the republic of Hawaii shall be carried on to final judgment and execution in the corresponding courts of the Territory of Hawaii; and all process issued and sentences imposed before this act takes effect shall be as valid as if issued or imposed in the name of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

On page 58, section 10, line 23, add the following:

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. KNOX. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield to another gentleman under the rule.

Mr. McRAE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be reported to the committee.

Mr. McRAE. Following the language of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the act approved February 26, 1885, "to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and the same are hereby, extended to and made applicable to the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. That is already provided by the bill, our entire immigration laws——

Mr. McRAE. I think there is some doubt about that. I do not think you will lose anything by expressly and positively extending this law and making it clear.

Mr. KNOX. We might then go on and extend all the laws separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I propose this as a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that as the bill being considered by the committee is itself an amendment, it is not in order to consider any other amendment than that proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts until that amendment is disposed of.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Then would it be in order to move to strike out the last word? I desire to be heard on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order to move to strike out the last word of the gentleman's amendment, because that would be an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Have I not the floor? I present this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman presents a substitute, which will be read in the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 10, on page 58, and insert:

"CONSTRUCTION OF EXISTING STATUTES.

"SEC. 10. That all rights of action, suits at law and in equity, prosecutions, and judgments existing prior to the taking effect of this act shall continue to be as effectual as if this act had not been passed; and those in favor of or against the Republic of Hawaii, and not assumed by or transferred to the United States, shall be equally valid in favor of or against the government of the Territory of Hawaii. All offenses which by statute then in force were punishable as offenses against the Republic of Hawaii shall be punishable as offenses against the government of the Territory of Hawaii, unless such statute is inconsistent with this act or shall be repealed or changed by law. All criminal and penal proceedings then pending in the courts of the Republic of Hawaii shall be prosecuted to final judgment and execution in the name of the Territory of Hawaii; all such proceedings, all actions at law, suits in equity, and other proceedings then pending in the courts of the Republic of Hawaii shall be carried on to final judgment and execution in the corresponding courts of the Territory of Hawaii; and all process issued and sentences imposed before this act takes effect shall be as valid as if issued or imposed in the name of the Territory of Hawaii: Provided, That no suit or proceedings shall be maintained for the specific performance of any contract heretofore or hereafter entered into for personal labor or service, nor shall any remedy exist or be enforced for breach of any such contract, except in a civil suit or proceeding instituted solely to recover damages for such breach.

"SEC. 11. That all contracts made since August 12, 1898, by which persons are held for service for a definite term, are hereby declared null and void and terminated, and no law shall be passed to enforce said contracts in any way; and it shall be the duty of the United States marshal to at once notify such persons so held of the termination of their contracts."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the substitute proposed for the amendment is the provision adopted by the Senate after a most careful consideration. I took the time to go to individual Senators—Senator NELSON, Senator PETTIGREW, and others—and all agree that it wipes out effectually this contract labor in Hawaii. It was suggested to me by those Senators that this would be the proper and the best provision to pass upon this subject. I believe the chairman of the committee will accept this. The only difference between this and the main portion of the provision of the gentleman from Massachusetts is the words "obligation and contracts" are eliminated from the first line, and then the Senate's last section, which is wiping out the labor contract, is appended. That is the only difference.

Mr. McRAE. I did not understand it from the reading of it. I would like to hear some explanation from the gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is the Senate's provision, drawn by Senator PETTIGREW.

Mr. McRAE. It does not make any difference whom it was drawn by; it is not clear to me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It says:

That all contracts made since April 12, 1898, by which persons are held for service for a definite term, are hereby declared null and void and terminated, and no law shall be passed to enforce said contracts in any way; and it shall be the duty of the United States marshal to at once notify such persons so held of the termination of their contracts.

Mr. McRAE. What we want and what the law gives us in this country is to prohibit the shipowners from bringing these people into the country.

Mr. KNOX. Those laws are all extended by the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; but that does not go far enough on the labor contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I note in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts one very important and good thing, something that brings a little ray of hope to the people of Hawaii, and that is taking them from a worse slavery and servitude than that which existed in the South. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that such a provision as I find at the bottom of that amendment is inserted:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the merchant seamen.

Mr. KNOX. It is perfectly apparent; it applies to shipping contracts that are made between owners and masters of vessels and seamen. That has been the custom of all naticns from time immemorial.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I see the object of the gentleman in taking up my time.

Mr. KNOX. Well, the gentleman from Ohio asked me a question, and I was simply answering it.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. But I did not ask the gentleman to make a speech. Why was that proviso added? Where did it come from? I think I can fathom the motive that inspired it and see the hand that penned it. You propose to go to Hawaii and relieve the enslaved foreigners there from servitude, and renew the bonds of American seamen, turning them over to imprisonment. Where does the proviso come from? In the peculiar organization of the committees of the House there is one committee purposely arranged to carry out the dictates and commands of a gigantic syndicate seeking to perpetrate an enormous robbery of our Treasury, a subject to which I may, if I have the time, devote a little attention before I close. From that committee—from the Merchant Marine Committee—for a particular purpose, this proviso comes. What purpose can the House have, and what excuse can you find for indorsing it?

Where will you go for reasons to justify a provision by which you may imprison American seamen for exercising the right of every American citizen while by an act forming a new government, creating a Territorial government under the Constitution of the United States, you relieve from slavery and the dungeon the Japanese, the Chinese, the Portuguese, the Malays, and every other class of pauperized and degraded labor taken by capital into the Hawaiian Islands, and at the same time, under this apparently insignificant proviso of a bare dozen words, American seamen may be thrown into prison at the complaint of the owner of any ship, subsidized by American money or otherwise, as is proposed to be done in this House? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I object, sir, in the name of justice and right, to placing in the hand of any man the arbitrary right to imprison an American seaman, to consign him to a period of involuntary servitude, at pleasure. I denounce the right to do this anywhere, on land or on the sea. And yet we see it to-day in the Cœur d'Alene mining district; we behold men held to servitude on American soil, under the guns of Federal soldiers, and sanctioned by a Republican President and a Republican Administration, despite and in defiance of the Constitution. And this proviso seeks to perpetuate a brutal and inhuman custom, because, forsooth, "it has been the custom of all nations from time immemorial."

Mr. Chairman, it has been the proud boast of American orators, statesmen, and writers that the United States stood in the van of civilization and progress; that we as a people and a nation have long since discarded and abandoned the swaddling clothes of barbarism and superstition; that we have outgrown and forever buried the idea of blind faith. We live in an age of reason and place every creed and dictum under the microscope and scalpel, and to a certain extent the boastings of our patriotic fellow-countrymen are justified by existing conditions, but, sir, we are still of the earth earthy; there still clings to us a few relics of the dark ages. Polygamy and slavery are hideous evils, to be met and faced to-day as well as in ages gone by. Yes; under the sanction and protection of our flag both these evils exist, and exist because of the permission of a Republican Administration. Shall we defend these foes to our institutions because they have existed "from time immemorial?"

A strange anomaly presents itself to us here. Our country at the close of a long and sanguinary civil war thought to take a gigantic leap onward and upward toward the realization of Christian civilization, and give at one bound the gracious boon of freedom to millions of the colored race held in bondage of American slavery. An amendment to the Constitution was adopted by the necessary majority of the States, thus becoming a part and portion of the framework of our Government. If the statesmen of that period had been as wise and brilliant as their successors of to day they would simply have passed an act of Congress, and the same result would have been attained, according to the arguments that have been presented on the Republican side of this Chamber on various questions of constitutional matters under discussion. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, while every other class of citizens, and taking in foreigners also, are by statute given the constitutional protection of our civil law, yet American seamen are by express statute barred therefrom, and objection is raised to affording them relief because "from time immemorial" they have been subjected to imprisonment, branding, jack-o'-nine-tails, and other inhuman and unjust tortures at the hands of brutal masters and shipowners.

The statute which this proviso seeks to retain in full force and effect is section 4598 of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

If any seaman who shall have signed a contract to perform a voyage shall at any port or place desert, or shall absent himself from such vessel without leave of the master or officer commanding in the absence of the master, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace within the United States, upon the complaint of the master, to issue his warrant to apprehend such deserter and bring him before such justice, and if it then appears that he has signed a contract within the intent and meaning of this title, and that the voyage agreed for is not finished or altered, or the contract otherwise dissolved, and that such seaman has deserted the vessel, or absented himself without leave, the justice shall commit him to the house of correction or common jail of the city, town, or place, to remain there until the vessel shall be ready to proceed on her voyage, or till the master shall require his discharge, and then to be delivered to the master, he paying all the cost of such commitment and deducting the same out of the wages due to such seaman.

And the next section, No. 4599, goes on and says that even before a voyage has commenced any master, mate, owner, or consignee may arrest, without the formality of a warrant, any seaman who may see fit to throw up his contract.

The beginning of this cruel exception against the seaman was away back before the dawn of the Christian era, at a time when human life and human liberty were considered as of but little or no value, where government was absolute despotism, and sailors were branded in the face for disobedience, or by statute kept on "bread and water for one year."

The thirteenth amendment to our Constitution says:

Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Does not this proviso violate the spirit of individual liberty and freedom of choice inherent in our American institutions? Does it not contravene the plain letter of this constitutional amendment?

We battled with England because of her arrogant claim and exercise of the alleged right of stopping our merchant vessels and impressing our seamen into her service. If evidence brought out before investigating commissions is to be believed, the owners and masters of merchant vessels to day have not abandoned the practice of impressing or "shanghaiing" seamen to fill up their crews, and once enrolled these men are helpless, victims of their master's pleasure, and this proviso continues them in their "involuntary servitude." You may call it what you will, it is slavery still. To compel one man to render personal service to another in private business affairs is slavery. If you can compel the seaman to wear the chains, you can and you will soon apply them to the miner, the railway employee, the mechanic, in fact this proviso opens the way to the actual legalized industrial slavery of every workman in the land.

The argument of military or naval service is not analogous to industrial employment. Service for the country is service rendered for the public weal, and is the duty of every patriotic citizen to perform when necessary; but in private business no such question arises, and while a suit for damages might be good and hold for the nonperformance of contract, to require one to remain at employment against his will at the personal pleasure of his master is a violation of the Constitution as it now is.

There is danger in placing this privilege in any man's power. With the accession of power there is almost universally the tendency or desire toward an arbitrary and tyrannical use of it. There is soon a hatred and defiance of all restraint or criticism and an effort to crush out all opposition. No amount of Republican argument can convince the people, and especially the laboring people, that the Republican party is in sympathy with them, when every expression, every act of that party, as such, is in the interest of syndicated capital and the extension of the powers of the trusts. Scarce four years ago William McKinley stood upon the vine-clad porch at Canton and glorified the Constitution; less than two years ago his whole soul seemed to shrink from thoughts of war; but so rapid has the intoxication of power worked that to-day the Constitution is a byword and a plaything, and the Army and Navy at his command are standing ready to defy the whole world—England excepted. [Applause.]

This proviso comes from the syndicate that is backing the ship-subsidy stealing scheme, and they will have what they ask for.

The Republican party has trampled over the Constitution, not once nor twice, but again and again. In the early days, when there were statesmen and patriots in that party, the Constitution as the magna charter of our liberty was revered, and it was treason to tamper with it, but with the accession of power came consequent development of disregard of the Constitution as well as moral decadence of the leaders of the party. With that party the sole object in view, the only goal aimed at, is success and continuance in power for the opportunity to raid the public Treasury and despoil the people by legalized robbery, at the sacrifice of all principle, morality, and justice. This is seen in their course on the Philippine question, with the currency act, confirmed by their votes on the infamous Porto Rican bill, continued in the proviso now under discussion, and indicated in the proposed ship-subsidy scheme.

Everywhere and at all times they hasten to bow down before syndicates and trusts, crying "We hear thy mandates and obey." The tentacles of the giant octopus trust are many and far-reaching. They go out to Idaho, and labor is throttled. At the command of the Standard Oil Company the President sends his troops there, and martial law is supreme in a county where not a single act of violence or resistance to law can be proved against the miners there at work. Wholesale arrests are made without warrants or process of law; men guilty of no crime are imprisoned in filthy barns and "bull pens," and kept there for months half fed, without medical care, with insufficient clothing, and not given a trial or hearing. A single instance will illustrate hundreds of cases: A number of miners had decided to quit work under the conditions prevailing. They were summoned to a hall, surrounded by Federal soldiers, and the lieutenant in charge said to them, "I will give you ten minutes to think the matter over. No one will be permitted to leave this hall until the men decide to go to work." The men declined to obey the order and were taken to prison.

This is a condition that may prevail in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Michigan, in any State or Territory in the Union, if trust rule be not speedily checked. The excitement caused at large through the nation by the exposure of conditions prevalent in Idaho became so great that the trusts saw that something must be done, so they circulated a petition in Shoshone County, asking the President to retain the troops there; that public safety demanded it; but no one would sign it. Then was issued an order that "all people who refused to sign the petition should leave the county." Is not that freedom and personal liberty with a vengeance?

Labor should be king. It is labor that with every swing of time's pendulum builds up and increases the store of material achievement. It is labor that makes the valleys and plains to blossom as the rose; that builds railroads and gathers the burdens they bear to teeming ports, and fill the ships leaving our shores with heavy-laden holds. It is labor that clears our forests, digs our mines, builds our cities, tills our fields, and reaps our harvests. Labor gives voice to countless factories, and under its power the hills and mountains join in echoing song of new life and advanced prosperity. This being so, labor should share in the reward, and the nation builded and developed on a grand and magnificent scale by its brawn and muscle should be a nation greeting and welcoming labor to a part in its uplift, and a promise of a peaceful, constant, and happy dwelling place within its borders. [Applause.]

The power back of this effort to continue involuntary servitude of American seamen has in contemplation the downfall of organized labor and the speedy reduction of all labor to serfdom or to a "mild form of feudal customs," as one of their champions puts the phrase. The Standard Oil Company is back of the Federal guns in Idaho, holding labor in involuntary servitude. In Ohio, and I quote from an article published in the Forum, of Bucyrus, Ohio:

STANDARD OIL COMPANY AND SUNDAY WORK.

The Standard Oil Company last week issued an order for its pumpers to work on Sunday hereafter. Some of them refused to obey the order, and when they went to work Monday morning they were discharged.

There they are striving to subjugate the workmen by compelling them to surrender their religious convictions and their manhood. This same company is prompting the support in this Chamber of this proviso and is demanding the passage of the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill. I am told that I am opposing the maritime laws of this Government by opposing this proviso. If my interpretation of section 4598 be correct, if I read it aright, it ought to be opposed and legislated out of existence. I oppose all manner of slavery or involuntary servitude, save as punishment for crime, wherever it is. In this bill we are making new laws for new territory, and I am in favor of weeding out and destroying every vestige of such flagrant violation of the thirteenth constitutional amendment as this proviso seeks to perpetuate. [Applause.]

I am in favor of the extension to the widest limit of the commerce of the United States. I want to see the white sails and the smoke-stacks of our merchant marine going to every port in the whole world. I will welcome any measure that will add to the number of American registered vessels and give employment to American seamen, and to such a bill, one that will do all this and at the same time benefit the agricultural and labor interests of my country, I will give all the energy and ability I may possess to secure its passage. But the Hanna-Payne iniquity is not such a bill. It is a simple scheme to rob the Treasury for the benefit of the Standard Oil Company and its syndicated copartners.

Those who are arguing in its favor talk as though shipbuilding was an unknown or trifling industry in our country. They seek to convince one that there is not half a dozen shipyards in the whole country; and yet there are over a score along the Atlantic coast, there are several on the Pacific seaboard, and along the Great Lakes you will find more than a dozen, where ocean-going steamships and others of enormous size and dimensions are created. In shipyards of my own State steel steamships and others of over 6,000 tons burden each have been and are being constructed. Then, too, in addition to the carrying capacity of these steamships, they are designed to tow enormous steel barges, each with cargo capacity equal to many ocean steamers. It has not needed a Government subsidy as incentive for this immense shipbuilding, and it may be safely predicted that, as the demands of trade require, more and larger achievements along this line will result, and through private enterprise.

Based upon the economic absurdity that a nation is made more prosperous by taxing the great mass of the people for the enrichment of the few—legalized robbery—the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill proposes to levy a tax upon the people of $100,000,000, to be given by the cunningly worded provisions of the bill solely and exclusively to a few favored corporations, the controlling stockholders in which are the directors of the Standard Oil Company. It is an outrageous piece of class legislation, supported with the utmost aggressiveness by the influences of the trust-ridden Administration and a busy and most powerful lobby. The party lash is being diligently applied and all the powers of the syndicates and combines are being employed in its behalf.

Defeated in a former Congress because of the opposition of Speaker Reed, it comes up again; and every true servant of the people will be found arrayed against it.

The bill professes "to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States." To say nothing of the discrimination against agriculture and labor, as well as the internal trade of the country, the provisions of the bill do not bear out the glowing promise of its title. By its provisions relating to tonnage, speed, and number of trips, all sailing vessels and "tramp" steamers, so called, are discriminated against to the extent of almost barring them from receipt of any portion of the subsidy, and it is this class of vessels that keep freight rates down, and by their being shut out from competition rates will increase and both producer and consumer suffer. It is certain that the millions to be taken from the people by the continuation of war taxes and high tariff will go to a few shipowners, and it is not at all probable that any considerable portion of it would go back to the American people; either through lower rates or increased wage to the laboring man. While the bill apparently specifies in one paragraph that "one-fourth of crew shall be Americans," yet in the next comes the proviso, "unless the stated proportion of an American crew can not be reasonably obtained."

At the taking of the last census there were employed 114,736 persons in "crews of all operating craft" in the United States; deducting the 58,556 employed on the lakes, only 58,180 persons were engaged in foreign and coasting trade, and the proportion is no greater to-day, and these are not all native or naturalized Americans. The bill is not in the interest of American seamen. It is not in the interest of agriculture, for the granting of subsidy to a certain line of shipping means the lessening of competition and the consequent increase of freight rates on exports, which reduces the price paid to the farmers on every bushel of wheat, corn, and other grain raised by them, and what but loss to the farmer can result from such a course.

The bill is designed and framed in the special interest of a shipowning syndicate, and the principal beneficiary, under the peculiar wording of the bill, is the International Navigation Company, a company in which the Standard Oil people hold the controlling power.

By the terms of the bill this company would receive annually for ten years, without increasing a particle its present employees, business, or carrying capacity, the enormous sum of $1,570,781.92. In addition to this the Government now pays to this company $485,673.60 annually for carrying the mails. In contemplation of the forced passage of the subsidy bill the company now has other ships contracted for; so that if the bill does become a law, this one company will soon be receiving a yearly subsidy of $2,707,318, to be paid by the people of the United States as a gratuity—a gratuity as far as the people are concerned—but the navigation company will be expected to turn over a share of its millions to the treasurer of the Republican campaign corruption fund. [Applause.]

No wonder there is no prospect of the repeal or amendment of the war-revenue tax law; no wonder that pensions are cut down and claims delayed and rejected without just cause; no wonder that internal improvements are stopped and rivers and harbors neglected, when such mercenary schemes as this are presented and receive recognition and adoption by the Republican majority in this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, the proviso under discussion is the production of the syndicate back of the subsidy scheme. They contemplate the continuance and extension of arbitrary power so that they can hold in subjection and servitude, even to the uttermost parts of the earth, those who may once come under their control. They seek the further use and extension of Federal bayonets, so that not alone in distant Idaho, but in the cities, in Chicago, in Cleveland, in Pittsburg, in Philadelphia, New York, and everywhere and anywhere they please American labor can be crushed by American bullets. [Applause.]

I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] not to leave the floor, but stand at his place here and now and defend American seamen against the slavery continued by this proviso.

I denounce the schemes contemplated by the servants of syndicates here. I denounce this proviso, and I beg every man on this side of the House—aye, if there be a patriot, a lover of his country, a friend of justice, and a friend of labor on the Republican side, I beg him to join with us and vote to strike out with just indignation this glaring wrong to American seamen. [Applause.]

Each one of us here has sworn that we will support the Constitution of the United States. It is absolutely binding upon us all. Framed, interpreted, and applied for over a century, becoming the very Government itself, the Constitution should be the object of our care and solicitude. We should above all others obey its articles and keep within its limitations, and yet it is deliberately proposed here to violate this fundamental law of our land. I plead with you to-day for justice to the American seaman. I call upon you to open the way for a broader application of the principles of equity and right. I plead that in the exercise of our constitutional duties we secure to all classes of American citizens the blessings and privileges granted to them under the Constitution we have sworn to obey. Give to labor its just dues and prerogatives. Give it the protection it demands—equality alone—nothing more, nothing less.

We have fought in days gone by for our political independence and won; we fought for the maintenance and preservation of the Union and won; but we must now battle with a more dangerous and subtle foe than we have ever faced on battlefield. Greed, avarice, and unholy ambition threaten our national existence. Let us be men, strong, brave-hearted, and true; true to our country and true to our countrymen; and stand for the right and for the rights of all as against special privileges to a few. Corrupt influences and means in times past have brought about temporary triumph of evil, but—

Though the heel of the strong oppressor
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voices of fame with one acclaim
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning
And keep this motto in sight:
"No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right."

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNOX) there were—40 ayes and 27 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to add to the last section the substitute I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the last section the following:

"That all contracts made since August 12, 1898, by which persons are held for service for a definite term, are hereby declared null and void and terminated, and no law shall be passed to enforce said contracts in any way; and it shall be the duty of the United States marshal to at once notify such persons so held of the termination of their contracts."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the subject which is provided for by the proposed amendment is one that the bill presented to this House by the commissioners contemplated, in other language, which I will read, and which is carried into effect in the Hawaiian Islands by the fifth section of this bill and the original commissioners' bill:

All contracts for a term of service of any subject of China, Japan, or any oriental country in the United States are hereby declared void.

That is in the statutes of the United States which were extended over the Hawaiian Islands by the bill of this committee and by the original bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That was not considered by the other body of Congress as sufficient to wipe out the system of contract labor in Hawaii. Outside of the two words "obligation" and "contract," which are embodied in the amendment of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, this is deemed a supplemental section to his amendment which strikes this system down effectually and has already met the indorsement and approval of the other body of Congress.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division called for by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana—ayes 45, noes 42.

Mr. MCRAE. I now offer the amendment which was read a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following paragraph to section 11:

"That the act approved February 20, 1885, to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States or its Territories and the District of Columbia, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and the same are hereby, extended to and made applicable to the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. KNOX. I have repeatedly stated that by express provision of this bill the act referred to in the gentleman's amendment, as all other acts of the United States relating to the importation of alien labor or contract labor, are extended to Hawaii. If we once start to specify different laws of the United States as being extended by this bill we can never complete it.

Mr. MCRAE. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] desires to accomplish exactly what I do; but I am afraid that the resolution which annexed Hawaii and which continued in force the Hawaiian laws, and section 10 of this bill, which undertakes to deal with the labor contracts, will still leave this question in doubt. The power to exclude contract laborers and the power to prohibit the steamship owners from carrying them there is what is needed and is just what my amendment will give. It is a short paragraph, and it can do no harm, and may do much good. I do not want us to take any risk about it. I know that this very language was passed by the House in the last Congress without a division, but the Senate for some reason refused to adopt it.

There have been brought into Hawaii within the last year over 30,000 laborers under contract, in violation of our law. Unless you make it perfectly plain that we intend to prevent alien contract labor, it will be brought in, to the great detriment of the honest laborers of this country. Those who dominate these islands want such labor, and the provisions of section 10, which only permits suits on such contracts, will not break up the system.

Mr. KNOX. The objection made to the bill which was before us in the last Congress was that it was a separate bill, and that the provision in question should be included in the general bill. I am sure the gentleman will remember that that objection was made.

Mr. MCRAE. There was no substantial objection here. The bill passed this House, and went to the Senate, where it was buried in some way. I think, in view of this fact, that this paragraph ought to be put in this bill in plain unmistakable language and denouncing heavy penalties against those who violate it. To allow suits without making the acts criminal will do but little if any good toward preventing such contracts.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCRAE, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 58, noes 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

OATH OF OFFICE.

SEC. 19. That every member of the legislature and all officers of the Territory of Hawaii shall take the following oath or affirmation:

I solemnly swear (or affirm), in the presence of Almighty God, that I will faithfully support the Constitution and laws of the United States, and conscientiously and impartially discharge my duties as a member of the legislature, or as an officer of the Territory of Hawaii (as the case may be).

Mr. KNOX. I desire to offer an amendment—simply verbal.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "officers," in line 18, section 19, page 60, and after the word "officer," in line 24 of the same section, insert the words "of the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUNISHMENT OF PERSONS NOT MEMBERS.

SEC. 25. That each house may punish by fine, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, any person not a member of either house who shall be guilty of disrespect of such house by any disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence or that of any committee thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thereof," in line 4, page 62, the language which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Who shall, on account of the exercise of any legislative function, threaten harm to the body or estate of any of the members of such house; or

Who shall assault, arrest, or detain any witness or other person ordered to attend such house, on his way going to or returning therefrom; or

Who shall rescue any person arrested by order of such house.

But the person charged with the offense shall be informed, in writing, of the charge made against him, and have an opportunity to present evidence and be heard in his own defense.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This provision was passed by the Senate in the form in which I have offered it. It relates to the authority of each house of the legislature over the proceedings of its committee, and provides for the punishment of persons who may attempt to interfere with witnesses in attendance upon investigations of the legislature.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUALIFICATIONS OF SENATORS.

SEC. 34. That in order to be eligible to election as a senator a person shall—
Be a male citizen of the United States;
Have attained the age of 25 years;
Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and be qualified to vote for senators.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that at this place it would be appropriate to insert the words "in the district from which he is elected," to follow the last word "senators," in line 13, so that the one elected shall be qualified to be a senator in the district from which he is elected. Unless that omission has been supplied by the gentleman in some other form, I desire at this time to propose it as an amendment, providing, as it does, that they must reside in the district from which they are elected, or be voters in the district.

Mr. KNOX. I make no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUALIFICATIONS OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SEC. 40. That in order to be eligible to be a member of the house of representatives a person shall, at the time of election—
Have attained the age of 25 years;
Be a male citizen of the United States;
Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years;
And shall be qualified to vote for representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, offer a like amendment as to representatives.

Mr. KNOX. I make no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "representatives," in line 13, page 66, insert "in the district from which he is elected."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETO OF GOVERNOR.

SEC. 49. That every bill which shall have passed the legislature shall be certified by the presiding officers and clerks of both houses, and shall thereupon be presented to the governor. If he approves it, he shall sign it, and it shall become a law. If the governor does not approve such bill, he shall return it, with his objections, to the legislature.

He may veto any specific item or items in any bill which appropriates money for specific purposes; but shall veto other bills, if at all, only as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] sent to the desk an amendment to this section.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent to pass the section until he is present in the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the section be passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 52. That appropriations, except as otherwise herein provided, shall be made biennially by the legislature.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 52.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 69, section 52, line 11, after the word "legislature" insert the following:

"Provided, however, That pending the time when this act shall take effect, and until a session of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall be held, the President may in his discretion authorize and direct the use of such money in the Treasury of the republic of Hawaii, as well as of the Territory of Hawaii, as he shall think requisite and proper for carrying on the government of Hawaii, the preservation of the public health, the completion of the sewerage system of Honolulu, and such other expenses as in the President's judgment shall seem to be appropriate."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

Mr. KNOX. This is simply until the legislature meets. The legislature can not meet until February.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand, but it puts the funds of the republic in the hands of the President.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 21.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 54. That in case of failure of the legislature to pass appropriation bills providing for payments of the necessary current expenses of carrying on the government and meeting its legal obligations as the same are provided for by the then existing laws, the governor shall, upon the adjournment of the legislature, call it in extra session for the consideration of appropriation bills, and until the legislature shall have acted the treasurer may, with the advice of the governor, make such payments, for which purpose the sums appropriated in the last appropriation bill shall be deemed to have been reappropriated.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 69, section 54, line 25, add the following:

"And all legislative and other appropriations made prior to the date when this act shall take effect shall be available to the government of the Territory of Hawaii."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE POWER.

SEC. 55. That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable. The legislature, at its first regular session after the census enumeration shall be ascertained, and from time to time thereafter, shall reapportion the membership in the senate and house of representatives among the senatorial and representative districts on the basis of the population in each of said districts who are citizens of the Territory; but the legislature shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress; nor shall it grant private charters, but it may by general act permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for manufacturing, agricultural, and other industrial pursuits, and for conducting the business of insurance, savings banks, banks of discount and deposit (but not of issue), loan, trust, and guaranty associations, for the establishment and conduct of cemeteries, and for the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, vessels, and irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable, or scientific association. No divorce shall be granted by the legislature, nor shall any divorce be granted by the courts of the Territory unless the applicant therefor shall have resided in the Territory for two years next preceding the application, but this provision shall not affect any action pending when this act takes effect; nor shall any lottery or sale of lottery tickets be allowed; nor shall any public money be appropriated for the support or benefit of any sectarian, denominational, or private school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the government; nor shall the government of the Territory of Hawaii, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the Territory, make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or in any manner lend its credit for the use thereof; nor shall any debt be authorized to be contracted by or on behalf of the Territory, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, except to pay the interest upon the existing indebtedness, to suppress insurrection, or to provide for the common defense, except that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes the legislature may authorize loans by the Territory, or any such subdivision thereof, for the erection of penal, charitable, and educational institutions, and for public buildings, wharves, roads, and harbor and other public improvements, but the total of such indebtedness incurred in any one year by the Territory or any subdivision shall not exceed 1 per cent upon the assessed value of taxable property of the Territory or subdivision thereof, as the case may be, as shown by the last general assessment for taxation, and the total indebtedness for the Territory shall not at any time be extended beyond 7 per cent of such assessed value, and the total indebtedness of any subdivision shall not at any time be extended beyond 3 per cent of such assessed value, but nothing in this provision shall prevent the refunding of any existing indebtedness at any time; nor shall any such loan be made upon the credit of the public domain or any part thereof, nor shall any bond or other instrument of any such indebtedness be issued unless made redeemable in not more than five years and payable in not more than fifteen years from the date of the issue thereof. No retrospective law shall be enacted.

Mr. KNOX. I offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, section 55, line 14, after the word "thereof," insert the following:
"Nor shall any such bond or indebtedness be incurred until approved by the President of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 71, line 7, after the word "allowed:"

Nor shall saloons for the sale of intoxicating drinks be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "allowed," on page 71, line 7, insert the following:
"Nor shall saloons for the sale of intoxicating drinks be allowed."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in this country I am generally in favor of leaving the saloon question to local option, for I do not believe legislation is generally effective unless enforced by public opinion; but it seems to me that in this new dependency there is a special reason why some such law as this should be here adopted.

In the first place, I have understood that public opinion there has in the past been largely governed by a small class of American citizens, who under this bill will be in a small minority, so that this is different from any other of the Territories, and it would be unfortunate to have the existence of the saloon become a matter of local politics.

In the second place, it has been an unfortunate fact that in all the cases of the contact of a higher civilization with a lower we somehow seem to succeed first in introducing our own vices rather than our virtues. We are not particularly successful in dealing with the liquor question in our own country, but the habits of intoxication which always accompany our first attempts to elevate a race which we consider inferior are notorious and need some vigorous prohibition.

This amendment would prevent, not all sales of liquor, for it would not interfere with hotels or private homes, but it would prevent the saloon, the gathering place and loafing resort where, in our new dependencies already great reproach upon the American people has been incurred, and I think it would be wise to have this prohibition in the act of Congress, and not leave it to the local legislature to become an issue in local politics.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say upon this amendment. I heartily agree with the purpose of the gentleman as to saloons wherever it may properly be carried out. I simply call the attention of the committee to chapter 1, Title XXIII, on the general subject relating to Territories—

The legislative power of every Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

For more than fifty years the legislatures of our Territories that we have organized have had the power to deal with questions of municipal and local interests in their legislatures.

Now we have created, and we do create by this bill, a legislature of Hawaii, with a senate and house of representatives, with a veto power conferred on the governor; and I think that the only safe way for Congress is to abide by the uniform practice of the past, and keep the matter of the regulation of the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors in Hawaii in the local legislature. I only desire, further, to call attention of the committee to the reasons why Congress has refrained from assuming the burden of liquor legislation for Territories. We, all of us that have license laws and prohibitory laws in the large cities, know of the vast amount of legislation required. If Congress once put down the bars and entered upon the broad field of legislating in reference to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, there would be no session of Congress long enough to dispose of such legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts will not prevail. It seems to me that the regulation of the liquor traffic is a matter for the Hawaiian legislature to act upon. The control of all liquor legislation in the past in the matter of enacting laws for the government of new Territories has been left to the Territories themselves; and in dealing with our new possessions which are to be admitted as Territories I think we ought to give them as much latitude as we can. We are pledged to do this, and we should carry out our promises.

It is impossible for Congress, sitting thousands of miles away from these islands, to settle the matter properly, because the different conditions as they arise can not be met.

It seems to me this is an exercise of the police power and we should go very slow. I am not a drinking man myself, and my views on this question are certainly not prejudiced in favor of the liquor interests. I believe in adopting the wisest course of action, and if this amendment should be added I do not think the law will ever be enforced.

The sentiment of the people of this country is not for prohibition, and, in my judgment, never will be.

Where the prohibitory law exists its enforcement is a farce. Drinking places in the State of Maine, which has a prohibitory law, are as common in some of the large cities as in the cities of Massachusetts, where the local-option system is in operation. Do not let us be hypocrites on this question.

If my colleague thinks it is wise to prohibit the sale of liquor, let us start right here in the city of Washington. We act as the city council of this city, and we have the power to put prohibition into force; and if there are men in this House who feel that prohibition is wise legislation and that the liquor traffic can be suppressed, let us commence right here in this city.

Yes, let us commence right here in the Capitol, where liquor is sold in both the Senate and House restaurants. I think we ought to be consistent, and I certainly am in favor of the position taken by Mr. KNOX, of Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, who says this matter ought to be left to the local Hawaiian government.

Let us enact laws that will harmonize with the views as well as the best government of our new possessions, and not introduce American government by inserting provisions that to me seem certainly unwise and bound to cause irritation if put into force.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

Mr. KNOX. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I rose just to say a few words on the amendment. If the chairman sees fit to make the point of order, he can do it, and that will be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will not waste any time in talking about the prohibition law of the State of Maine to-day. I will say that the gentleman can not put his finger on a spot or place in the State of Maine where liquor is sold openly. Now, I make that statement, and I am from that State. What I mean and what I wish to say in talking about the enforcement of the prohibitory law in Maine is that the people in Maine, four to one, are satisfied with the prohibitory law in Maine and believe in it. There is no open saloon—a place where your attention would be directed to its sale if you were not looking for it—in the State of Maine anywhere. Now, I come from that State, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Name a place where there is an open saloon in the State of Maine.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman will agree with me——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Name a place. I will not agree with you.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I challenge the gentleman to deny the fact that liquor can be obtained at almost any hotel in the city of Portland.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I say there is no open bar.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The bars are open enough in the hotels if my friend will investigate the matter.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, you can not bother me with that. I have heard that kind of conversation before. There is no use talking about it, and I say I challenge any man in this House or anywhere else to dispute the proposition that there is not a place in the State of Maine where liquor is sold openly. I make that statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I wish to say, and state it emphatically, that I deny that proposition. It is sold in the apothecary stores and the hotels in Portland and every other large city in Maine. I have seen it sold repeatedly myself. It is a fact that liquor can be obtained in these places, and I challenge the gentleman to deny it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Name the place.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I say in every hotel, and I will name the Falmouth Hotel in Portland as one inasmuch as the gentleman from Maine insists upon a specific answer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I say that there is no open saloon in the State of Maine.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I said nothing about an open saloon. I say that liquor is sold there regardless of the law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have not said that it was not sold. [Laughter.] Pay attention to what I say. I say that there is not an open saloon in the State of Maine where liquor is sold.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That only shows the hypocrisy down there. It is sold behind the door.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This amendment is directed upon the saloon in Hawaii. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that sixteen countries have, by treaty convention, agreed to prohibit the sale of distilled liquors to the native tribes of Africa, and if it is not true that the Hawaiians in Hawaii are of substantially the same character as the native tribes of Africa? [Cries of "Oh, no, no!"]

I understood that they were. They are all one tribe?

Mr. KNOX. No; there is no tribe there at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is there any great difference in character between the people in Hawaii and the tropical people in Africa?

Mr. HAMILTON. A vast difference.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But every proclamation in Hawaii has to be published in five different languages. That is the kind of people you are legislating for. I say it is the policy of the civilized countries to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, and sixteen of the great nations have agreed to that position in connection with the people of South Africa, and the United States is one of them.

Mr. KNOX. The gentleman does not wish to misstate anything. All proclamations and legal papers of every kind are to be made in the English language.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They are by this bill, but they are now published in five languages. I have that from the attorney-general of Hawaii. I say it is the policy of the civilized world to prohibit the sale of distilled liquors at least to the native tribes in Africa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that I may have three minutes to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I submit that this amendment is in line with that policy. I want to call attention just for a minute to the effect of this bill.

A MEMBER. Alaska had a prohibitory law.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; Alaska had a prohibitory law until it was repealed by the House a year ago. This bill creates for Hawaii three kinds of people who are citizens. Thirty-nine thousand native Hawaiians, about 17,000 Portuguese, and about 8,000

Anglo-Saxons. Now, the Anglo-Saxons are the people that are responsible for the development of Hawaii. The moment this bill is passed and becomes a law they can be voted down three to one on any of these propositions involving moral considerations. If the Anglo-Saxons had the entire control, personally I should be willing to leave this proposition with them; but they have not the control, and they can be outvoted by the Hawaiians and Portuguese.

Mr. KNOX. But it is the Anglo-Saxons who do the most of the drinking.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That may be. If the Anglo-Saxons do it, I would prohibit it, as far as they are concerned, in this Territory. I am ready to stand on the proposition that the United States is prepared to declare as its policy that it is against the sale of intoxicating liquors in saloons. With these suggestions I am ready to vote on the amendment.

Mr. FINLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made that debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may have two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of principle and conviction I would vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts; and, in addition to that, I will say that there are reasons existing peculiar to the native Hawaiian which, if understood by this House, I believe would cause each and every member here to vote for the amendment. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I can not go into these reasons or discuss them here. But it is true that these people are wasting away, the number decreasing; disease has dealt hardly with them, and I believe the best thing the American Congress can do for these people is to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, coming from a State that manufactures a very fine old beverage [laughter], I do not feel that it is necessary in legislating for the Hawaiian Islands that we should limit the use of that product, even to satisfy the fanatical State of Maine, from which we once had a Maine liquor law. My observation is that where you have prohibitory legislation, such as they had in the State of Maine, the liquor is always worse and more of it is drank than in a State where the people have the right to drink with the authority of law. [Laughter.]

I recollect that some years ago when I was in the State of Massachusetts, where there was a prohibitory liquor law, I stepped into a very quiet little place where you could get a drink for 15 cents, but you paid only for a sandwich or an egg; you did not buy the liquor. I went in there for the purpose of satisfying my thirst; and there was another gentleman there about to take his drink. I insisted—as it is a Kentucky custom never to drink alone—that he drink with me, which he promptly declined, considering that his acquaintance with me was not sufficient to permit him to do so. So he took his egg and I took my egg. Each of us took a drink of whisky, and I found it very common whisky.

Now, if you go into the State of Kentucky, where the moral sentiment of the community is about as good, I presume, as in Maine, especially in the logging country, you are always sure of getting a good drink of whisky, because there is no reason for giving you any other kind. But when that whisky gets north of the Ohio River they begin to adulterate it and compound it, and by the time it gets up to Maine it has been adulterated three or four times between the place of production and the place of consumption. That, I presume, is the reason why gentlemen from Maine object to it. [Laughter.]

Now, although the popular idea is that every Kentuckian drinks a good deal of whisky, I will guarantee that the average Kentuckian knows how to control his appetite—knows when to drink and just how much to drink—while farther north you find men inclined to drink too much, who consequently become topers.

Now, I do not believe in undertaking in this way to restrict the sale of liquor. And I do not believe that this is the place to adopt any regulation to control the consumption of liquor. This is a legitimate matter which ought to be left to the people themselves of that locality—not regulated by the United States Government.

I do not think the people of Maine or the people of Kentucky ought to dictate to the people of the Hawaiian Islands or the Philippines or wherever else our dominions may extend—and they seem inclined to go around the world. I do not think it is the duty of Congress to regulate the character of the liquor that people drink, or how much they shall drink or when they shall drink. Why, sir, the other day I saw a train of six cars start from my town carrying a cargo marked "Wiedeman's Beer," which was being sent across the continent, bound for the Philippines. Sir, we are now shipping the very finest quality of malt liquor to the Philippine Islands and to Hawaii for the benefit of those people. We want our markets extended. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 56, noes 57.

Mr. HILL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KNOX and Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 60.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "association," in line 25, page 70, the words:

"Provided, That no corporation, domestic or foreign, shall acquire or hold real estate in Hawaii in excess of 1,000 acres, and that real estate acquired or held by such corporation or association contrary hereto shall be forfeited and escheat to the United States. But existing vested rights in real estate shall not be impaired."

Mr. KNOX. I reserve a point of order on that amendment, that it is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to limit a tendency toward land monopoly in the islands of Hawaii. A few moments ago we had this question under discussion upon a provision of the bill which relieves the Territory of Hawaii from the operation of the general law regarding the Territories, a provision which limits the real-estate holdings of religious and charitable organizations to a value of $50,000. The House was of the opinion that the conditions in Hawaii do not necessitate the application of that limitation, and by its vote expressed its disposition to allow the religious and charitable organizations to extend their good work in that island without limit as to real-estate holdings. But this proposition reaches the vital question whether we shall allow in those islands a system which will gradually monopolize all the lands in large holdings either in the hands of individuals or of corporations, the mass of the population being attached to the soil in a semi-servile capacity without right to a foot of land upon which they stand.

This amendment respects vested rights. It does not propose to interfere with any of the holdings of that island at the present time, though those old holdings are large.

The general custom there is to organize a corporation for the purpose of running a sugar plantation. That corporation acquires a large tract of land, introduces extensive irrigation works, puts up a sugar factory, and commences business, and there is no doubt but that this kind of cooperation leads to the economical conduct of that business.

This amendment does not interfere with that cooperation. It simply limits the holdings of any corporation to 1,000 acres. I am not sufficiently informed as to whether this limitation is too large or too small. The purpose of this amendment is to get the subject-matter into this bill in some form, so that the committee of conference which will perfect the bill later on can take it up, and, having the subject-matter before them, cover it by some comprehensive provision. It seems to me, however, that we should give them the basis of that work by an amendment here. This amendment is not illiberal. It provides for holdings of a thousand acres, and it does not interfere with any existing holdings.

I have already stated the tendency in all these new possessions having tropical or semitropical climates to be toward land monopoly, and that tendency will increase as the value of these lands increases, by reason of the enlarged markets which annexation to our country will afford. It is the great evil now in Hawaii. It will be a greater evil in the future than it is now.

We should follow this up by some system of report to Congress, or to the Secretary of the Interior, showing the extent and character of the holdings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIDGELY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Nevada be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was saying that we should extend this legislation further, and provide for a system of reports, through the surveyor-general of the Territory to the Secretary of the Interior, showing the holdings of these lands, by whom held, whether individuals or corporations, the number of acres held, the character of the cultivation, the nationality of the labor employed, and the rate of wages paid, whether daily, weekly, or semimonthly. In this way we can amass here information which would serve a fruitful purpose hereafter, in legislation relating to these islands.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does this amendment propose to limit the amount of land which can be held by an individual?

Mr. NEWLANDS. This amendment does not, because it is an amendment to a section which relates to the organization of corporations, and if it included individuals it might be subject to a point of order. It provides that no corporation shall own exceeding 1,000 acres of land.

As I have stated already, my purpose is to furnish the basis for comprehensive action on this subject by the committee of conference. I do not think that here, in the short time afforded us for the consideration of this bill, we can map out and shape a measure that will meet every requirement.

In my remarks in reference to religious and church organizations, I pointed out the fact that the island of Puerto Rico is an island a hundred miles long and 40 miles wide, with a population of 900,000 people, the most thickly populated area in any civilized country. Now, shall we legislate with reference to these islands in such a way as to promote small holdings by people who have an interest in the soil, or shall we by inaction let these countries drift into conditions of land monopoly, which will only result as such systems have always resulted in conditions of unrest and disturbance leading to revolution? As I stated before, almost every war of any great extent, almost every revolution, has had its foundation in a revolt against the monopoly of land, whether that monopoly was held by the feudal barons or whether it was held by the nobility or by the church. Numerous revolts all over this continent and all over the European continent have taken place against the large holdings of the religious organizations, and it seems to me that it is wisdom now to put in this bill at the starting point comprehensive legislation upon this subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 36. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma G. Sargent;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 6527. An act granting an increase of pension to George Myers;

H. R. 1201. An act granting a pension to James McNutt;

H. R. 2170. An act granting a pension to Angeline Eyestone; and

H. R. 7264. An act granting a pension to Hannah C. Smith.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add a word to the able argument of the gentleman from Nevada in favor of this amendment. He does not claim that the specific provisions of the amendment are the best that can be devised to prevent land monopoly in these islands; but he does insist that the principle of limiting the holdings of land shall be incorporated into this law, and by the time it shall get through conference we will have determined what will be the wisest specific provisions.

But I wish to call the attention of members here to the fact that this question of limiting land holdings is not entirely new to this country. Away back in the forties and early fifties we discovered that our lands were being centralized to such an extent as to threaten landlordism and tenants to the extent that we put into the national land laws provisions limiting the number of acres of the public lands that might thereafter go to any one purchaser. What was the purpose of this? Clearly the intent was to hold the lands in small holdings.

Now, we are legislating for the Hawaiian Islands and for a country that has many more people to the acre than we have in this country; and in our land policy, as we assume the responsibility of legislating for these people, it certainly is of vital importance that we take the proper steps or at least commit ourselves to the policy of limiting the centralization of land titles, which must of necessity, if permitted to go unrestrained, result in a population of serfs attached to the land owned by and necessarily contributing to the landlord's wealth, and thereby to his power to accumulate more acres and more serfs. So I insist that we should support this amendment and commit ourselves to this policy of limiting the possibility of monopolizing the titles to land. This is a grave question, and one we will soon have to act upon at home; in fact, we ought to at once take positive action to break up and forever prevent landlordism wherever our flag shall float.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], to limit land holdings, may prevail.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, in the desperate straits in which gentlemen on the other side found themselves on the day when Congress assembled, for an issue on which to stand before the people in the coming Presidential election, they improved every opportunity in this Chamber to introduce resolutions of inquiry directed against the different departments of the Government. They have investigated the Secretary of the Treasury and consuls in South Africa, and other matters.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not speaking to the bill. We have only fifty minutes more, and there are important amendments to be offered. I make the point of order that it is out of order for the gentleman to address his remarks to other matters than the amendment under discussion.

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman has already taken as much time as I intended to take.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will take all the time we have to consider the amendments to the bill, and we ought to confine our discussion to the bill.

Mr. KNOX. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it was the distinct understanding on both sides that the discussion was to be confined to the amendments that were being considered, and that we have no time to consider general matters.

The CHAIRMAN. If the rule is appealed to——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do appeal to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota will be obliged to confine his remarks to the pending amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that, among other things, they had raised their hands in holy horror because, as they claim, the use of intoxicating liquor has increased in our new insular possessions, and, as I understand, are seeking to investigate that subject also. Yet, Mr. Chairman, they come before this body at the first opportunity that is offered to vote on any proposition to limit its use there, and to my utter surprise there are found many men on that side who have the temerity to rise in their places and object to and vote against the very thing that they are seeking to denounce in connection with their charges against the Republican party and the effect of its government of our new possessions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 58.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GILBERT. Have the amendment reported, please.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported to the committee.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX and the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

[Applause on the Democratic side].

The Clerk read as follows:

TOWN, CITY, AND COUNTY GOVERNMENT.

SEC. 56. That the legislature may create counties and towns and city municipalities within the Territory of Hawaii and provide for the government thereof.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in section 56, line 17, I move to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall." This would then read as the section reads in the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 17, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall;" so that it will read: "That the legislature shall create counties," etc.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. McDOWELL. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50; noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifth. Prior to such registration have paid a poll tax of $1 for the current year, due by him to the Government.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first three lines on page 74.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no qualification as to that section, and it is a special section having reference to voters. The custom, as I understand, in most of the States, requires a poll tax on each male inhabitant from the time that he is 21 years of age until he reaches the age of 50, and then from that time on no more. There is no limitation provided in this section.

It matters not how old the man may be, how decrepit, how honorable, how well educated, this would deprive him of the right of the franchise in his old age, even after serving his country well, of the right to vote unless he paid this poll tax of a dollar a year. This is a matter that can be very easily acted upon by the local legislature, and I do not think, unless there was some qualification or restriction, that this sweeping statement should be made, that no man would be permitted to register and vote unless he has previously paid a poll tax from the time he is 21 years until he dies. I do not think there is a necessity, therefore, that such legislation should be enacted by the United States Congress, and I hope that this section will be stricken out and leave that part to be managed by the local legislation. However, if this Republican Congress, through its committee, desires to incorporate this and other sections of the Mississippi election law in this statute for the government of the Hawaiians, I wish to say that I shall feel it my duty to vote against the bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply that while there were a number of Hawaiians before the committee, no objection whatever was made to this provision. Under the law of Hawaii there are other things included in what is considered as a personal tax than what we call a poll tax—for the support of education—making in all personal tax of about $5. We struck out every provision except the mere head tax of a dollar, and inserted it here. I will call the attention of the House also to the fact that it does not provide for back taxes that may be due, but that it simply provides for the payment of the tax for the current year.

It was thought it would be a very wholesome provision in reference to the suffrage of Hawaii; and I am sure it will not be taken as a precedent against the large class of citizens whom our friend so well represents.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 74, after the word "registration" and before the word "have," insert "and at least nine months prior to the election."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that amendment, I merely wish to say that it is the uniform experience of all States that have had poll-tax provisions that if the poll tax can be paid upon the day of election or the day before the election, or even a few weeks or any short time prior to the election, politicians will use the privilege of paying it for the purpose of indirectly buying votes; in other words, parties or candidates for office will pay the poll tax of a great number of voters upon condition, express or implied, that the votes are to be cast for their party or for themselves. Wherever a poll-tax provision has existed without some limitation as to the time at which it shall be paid prior to the election that has been the case.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The provision of this bill is that the poll tax shall be paid "prior to registration," and the present Hawaiian law fixes the registration about four months prior to the election. But of course that law might be changed at any moment. Moreover, four months is not a long enough time. If you fix it at nine months—a period sufficiently short—then it will tempt no corruptionist in politics to pay the poll taxes of any voter, for the simple reason that the man who is willing to give his vote in consideration of payment of his poll tax is not a man that can be trusted for nine months. He may be bought by the other side after that.

We have a provision like that in Mississippi—that is, for the payment of the poll tax of the previous year—and the consequence is that nobody has ever paid the poll tax of anybody else with the hope of buying a vote, or indeed for any purpose.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. When is the election to be held? How would you make it applicable to elections in the current year?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is the poll tax due nine months before. It makes the poll tax due nine months before payable. Of course no taxes not due at that time could be collectible, nor are they brought in question when the voter comes up to vote.

Mr. KNOX. The purpose of this provision was to extend to every citizen of Hawaii that could read and write and who resided in the proper district an opportunity to vote, with the sole condition that he shall have paid his poll tax. It was thought not right that a man who had a tax assessed against him, and who should offer to pay it at any time before the close of the registration, should be disfranchised. I suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that in any State I know of the poll taxes for the current year are not assessed nine months previous to the election. Our taxes are assessed in May, for instance.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My amendment does not make the poll tax for the current year the test for his vote; he shall pay the poll tax due nine months before the election, and that would necessarily be the poll tax of the previous year.

Mr. KNOX. Then the other language in the section will have to be stricken out, as it refers to the payment of the poll tax for the current year. Now, we do not think that a man who has failed in the past year to pay his poll tax, the year for which they are assessed, is in any better condition; he may have been deprived by sickness or misfortune in the past year from paying his poll tax. Now, if for the very year that he is assessed the poll tax he pays it, I do not think it is just that he should be deprived of his vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, Mr. Chairman, I wish to modify my amendment. I will strike out the word "current," in line 2, page 74, and substitute the word "previous." I did not notice the word "current" in the section. That will cure the trouble.

Mr. KNOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized on the amendment. I think this is an important amendment and one that should be passed. The present bill before the House is virtually making a constitution for Hawaii as long as it remains under Territorial form of government, unless altered by Congress. I think it should be the effort of the Congress of the United States, whenever it is possible to do so, to raise the citizenship of this country, to raise the value of the American franchise, whether it is in Hawaii, New York, or Alabama. I think that only those persons should be entitled to vote who have shown themselves qualified to exercise the right of citizenship; and I believe that when a man is unable or unwilling to pay $1 to support the government that furnishes him protection, he is not qualified to properly exercise the elective franchise.

But you do not throw that protection around the citizens who are entitled to the ballot if you merely put it up as a premium for some one to come in and purchase their votes by paying their registration fee. You should place it in a way that when the registration is paid it is paid by the citizen because he appreciates the value and privileges of the American citizen, the privilege of voting as an American citizen, the privilege of being one of the governing body of his country. I say that if you limit this, if you merely put it before registration, the Hawaiian legislature may some day change the time of registration down to a week before the election, when those who have money will be able to pay the registration tax and thereby control their votes.

Now, in this constitution (for it is practically a constitution we are about to adopt for Hawaii) I say we ought to protect the elective franchise to that extent and adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, and at least put it nine months in advance of the election.

The argument which my friend from Massachusetts makes, that the voter may be sick on that day or prevented by some reason from paying his registration nine months in advance, has no force, for the same rule may apply to four months or a week in advance. Not being obliged to pay it on any particular day, he has full opportunity. But I say, as the matter stands now, you have not properly guarded the bill against the corruption of the voter, and you should do it when you have the opportunity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if I had my way about this matter, I would strike out all reference to this poll tax. There is no greater outrage upon the institutions of the American people than to say that a man unable, in the language of the gentleman from Alabama, to pay a dollar shall not be permitted to vote for the men who are to be his governors during the succeeding year. Though, on a small scale, it still, in essence and fact, is a direct money power operating against the voter if he happens to be a poor man. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, in the wisdom of this committee, this bill has been so framed that the individual voter who desires to vote must pay his taxes upon the first official notice to him or he can not vote. Let us see how well this machinery works in comparison with that.

The voter comes to the proper place to register. He wants to vote—that is an indication of it. Then it is suggested to him, "Have you paid this dollar?" and then possibly—and very likely for the first time—it comes to his knowledge, or at least to his recollection, that he owes a dollar to the State or to the Government. Now, is it not enough if he pays that dollar then and there, in order to avail himself of his right to vote? Is this a machine to prevent voting? Is it a machine to send Congressmen here with 1,700 votes? Is that the purpose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman desire to leave it open for somebody else to pay the taxes for the voter?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I care nothing about that. If the gentleman challenges me, I will say to him that I would rather have a thousand scattering bribed votes than a condition where there are no votes and the election is made by a caucus.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the proposition here? How many of us remember to pay promptly on the day that they fall due all the little obligations that we owe to societies to which we belong or even to the State that taxes our property and taxes us in various ways? Has not a citizen done his whole duty if, when reminded of it, he pays and discharges the obligation he owes to his government?

I say there ought to be no obstacles thrown in the way of the voter. There ought to be no deliberate purpose here to entangle and defeat the votes of this great body of men. I am willing to vote for the proposition as the committee has reported it, to require the payment of a capitation tax. I do not believe in it; it is a burden upon many people. But certainly if people discharge their duty in paying this tax at a time as far in advance of the election as when the registration is taken, that surely ought to be sufficient. We ought not to permit such an amendment as this to go into the bill.

Mr. LINNEY. I would like to occupy a minute or two.

Mr. KNOX. I trust the gentleman will remember that we are to vote at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. LINNEY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order.

Mr. LINNEY. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me two minutes.

Mr. KNOX. Very well; I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I believe in manhood suffrage. I believe that crime should disqualify a citizen from the exercise of the right to vote, but misfortune or even negligence should not do so. If I read history aright, Sheridan, one of the grandest characters in all history, had his blanket sold, two days before his death, from off the cot on which he lay, for a tax. Yes, Sheridan, of whom it has been said:

> Nature made but one such man,
> And broke the die in molding Sheridan.

The day before yesterday I had the honor of addressing an audience of 2,000 people in the State of North Carolina upon the proposition to put in our constitution a provision somewhat like this. And I put to the sheriff the question, "How many white men in Moore County (one of the richest counties in the State) have not paid their poll tax up to this date?" He replied, "Seven hundred."

Mr. KLUTTZ. I ask the gentleman whether that provision in the constitutional amendment does not apply to the preceding year, not to the current year? Is not that so?

Mr. LINNEY. But it affects this year also, the year 1899, because the poll tax required to be paid is the tax due on the 1st day of March prior to the election and in the hands of the sheriff for collection.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is it not so?

Mr. LINNEY. Let that be as it may——

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is not that so? I ask an answer.

Mr. LINNEY. That was the preceding year. The preceding year means the year for which the taxes were collectible prior to the election. But substantially it applies to this year (1899 taxes). If such a provision as that now under consideration here were enforced in North Carolina, 700 white men of that county would be disfranchised because of their misfortune. I am willing that crime may disfranchise, but not the failure to pay a tax of $1. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against this amendment; and I hope that the Republican side of this House will not vote to adopt it, because—mark my prediction—in any State where such a provision may be adopted the result will be the disfranchising of thousands of the best kind of men. If a man is poor and ignorant, the ballot in his hands is an educator. Take that from him, and he will never shake off either the poverty or ignorance that degrades him. No country can afford to withhold from the poor and ignorant the only power that can elevate them.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 82.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 74, after the word "government," add "and the registration shall be held at least six months before the election."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is simply this: To add, after the word "government," in line 3, this language:

And the registration shall be held at least six months before the election.

I offer the amendment in that form in order to obviate certain objections that were made to it in its other form, and for the purpose of making it the poll tax of the current year instead of the poll tax of the previous year, yet at the same time to prevent all temptation to election manipulators and political corruptionists to buy votes by paying the poll tax.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What does the gentleman say with reference to clothing the legislature of Hawaii with the power to regulate that domestic affair?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We are now fixing the suffrage qualifications for Hawaii. If you are going to leave it to Hawaii to fix them, why, then do that. If there is anybody here who wants to run the risk of Kanaka rule in the islands of Hawaii, to run the risk of those Kanakas overthrowing and overturning the white people in those islands, then let him leave the entire matter of the suffrage to the people of Hawaii, making everybody out there voters, as you have done in other Territories.

Now, I for one do not believe in that. I for one opposed the admission of Hawaii, and did not want its destinies committed to my charge; but since it is here, I want white civilization in Hawaii, and I do not want Kanaka rule. So much in answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, however——

Mr. OLMSTED. Do you want that sort of a law in this Territory that will permit voting on the principle on which it is done in Mississippi, which sends seven Congressmen here with a total Congressional vote in the entire State of less than 25,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have, perhaps, less respect for the ad hominem argument than almost any man, but since the gentleman has made it, I might reply that you have already given Hawaii the Mississippi constitution, with this difference, and this difference only, that in Mississippi, after we had adopted these clauses, we broadened the suffrage by another one, and you have not.

Now, this is not a question to be discussed in a partisan spirit. I am not here for the purpose of bringing Mississippi into the discussion. You did not adopt these provisions because Mississippi had adopted them. You adopted them by the unanimous voice of the committee, because, under the circumstances, they seemed wise provisions to be adopted. Your committee have acted wisely and well in adopting the educational qualification, and you are going to adopt it, and also the poll-tax provision with or without my amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Your amendment will not permit a man to be registered or to vote if he happens to move from one side of the street to the other into a new election precinct within six months preceding the election.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I can not hear him and talk at the same time. Leaving him and his suggestions aside, which I have not heard, I say that the committee have acted wisely in adopting the educational qualification, in the first place, and also in adopting a qualification which will prevent, to a large extent, the votes of the thriftless and careless, and those who are indifferent to the sacredness of the suffrage as one of the most precious possessions of an American citizen. Any man who is willing to be bribed for a dollar not to vote is a man who does not attach sufficient weight to the franchise to be worthy to vote.

Mr. WHITE. What should be done with the man who offers the bribe?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You should give him no opportunity to offer it. That is what I am attempting to provide against. If you are going to adopt this provision of a poll tax, then, for heaven's sake, adopt it in such a way as that it may not become a mere piece of machinery for political corruption. If you want to have a poll tax, why should you leave it in such a condition that politicians can come upon election day, or a little time prior to that, and by paying the sum of $1 poll tax for each voter bribe those voters to cast their ballots? The amendment which I offer is a provision for the safeguarding or purification of the ballot. Either leave the poll-tax provision out or else let the poll tax be paid a sufficient time prior to the election to be certain of the fact that it shall not be an engine of corruption. Now, the amendment is simply that "the registration shall take place six months before the election." It takes place by Hawaiian law quite a while before the election now, but I fear present legal provisions might be changed later.

Mr. KNOX. Let us have a vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be open to five minutes' debate against the amendment. Does the gentleman desire to be recognized for that purpose?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not amendable. The amendment itself is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman permit a statement which does not affect this pending question? As the time is getting so near when we are to take a vote that the probability is that we shall not finish the reading of the bill, I desire to say that there are committee amendments to one or two sections which there is no dispute about, which are desired by both sides of the House. One is upon the last section, to the provision requiring the Chinese to register. There has been an apprehension that under that law they would have the right to come into the United States, and it is not the purpose of the committee that they should. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment to section 102 may be offered now, and the other section passed over temporarily.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are thirty-odd sections to the bill not yet read.

Mr. KNOX. We can agree, perhaps, upon the others, but why not let this be offered?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think we should proceed in the regular way.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I call for a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] is recognized against the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, much that the gentleman from Mississippi has said with reference to the amendment he proposes I consider inapplicable in Hawaii. We have heard much of the missionaries there, much of the Dole family compact, and the difficulty is that if those in power there were clothed with more privileges, with more chances to take advantage of the rank and file of the people, it would prove disastrous to the people.

All of those who are here representing Hawaii are united as to the wisdom of these provisions which are presented by the committee. A condition prevails there that does not exist in this country, and I think if the situation was understood that the rank and file of the people there would be better subserved and their interests better protected by adopting the committee section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 78.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. It is perfectly evident that this bill is not to be read through, and I have two amendments which I attempted to offer yesterday, on page 89 and section 103. I ask that the amendments may be considered as pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What are the amendments?

Mr. HILL. The first strikes out the provision for the Territorial Delegate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps you will agree to the second amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. HILL. Do you object to the second amendment without hearing it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the second amendment?

Mr. HILL. It is to provide that nothing in this bill shall be construed to pledge any future statehood.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object to that.

Mr. HILL. I thought you would.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth. Be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman, the section which has just been read surely is even more obnoxious, if possible, than the one which we have just passed, that discriminates against the unfortunate poor. I think it will not be a credit to this committee. The section will disqualify one from voting providing that he is physically unable to read or write the English or the Hawaiian language. Now, I would like to know of the chairman of the committee if he wishes to impose that character of disqualification upon those people?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To what is the gentleman from Kentucky speaking?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To what is the gentleman from Kentucky speaking?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion before the committee, except the substitute pending offered by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The section itself is pending, and the gentleman can speak to that.

Mr. PUGH. The section itself is pending, and it surely ought not to be indorsed by this committee. The section says that in order to be qualified the voter shall "be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language." This may apply to a physical as well as a mental disability. An unfortunate without an arm could not vote, a man deaf and dumb could not vote. This is a bad piece of legislation, which we are rushing through without due consideration. There ought to be an extension of the time for the consideration of this bill by the Committee of the Whole. We ought to move along in lines that will commend our work to the people of this country and also to the people for whose government we are legislating. I therefore move to strike out that section in its present form, unless the committee is willing to amend it so that it will not apply to those people who are physically disabled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 4 and 5, as follows:
"Sixth. Be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition. I see there is only about one minute left before the committee, under the rule, is required to rise; and I wish to say this: The gentleman from Massachusetts indicated a moment ago that he desired to offer other amendments, committee amendments, probably important committee amendments. I do not think there would be any objection to his doing it except this: That an appeal was made by this side of the House several days ago, when this bill was brought before the House, that we might have a reasonable time to consider this bill in Committee of the Whole in order that every section could be read and considered, where we could consider each section fairly and honestly; and the gentleman when he brought the bill before the House must have known that in the time between 12 o'clock to-day and 4 o'clock the bill could not be read through and thoroughly discussed——

The CHAIRMAN. Under the terms of the order made heretofore by the House, the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 222, with a substitute proposed by the Committee on the Territories, to which substitute sundry amendments had been agreed upon, and at the hour of 4 o'clock, in obedience to the order of the House, the committee rose, and the bill is reported to the House.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. To a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order to ask a separate vote upon one amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That was the very question that the Chair was about to put. The first question will be——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I give way to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KNOX. I ask consent of the House that the time for debate in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule and for amendments be extended to 5 o'clock, and that the order heretofore adopted be in no other respect modified.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent of the House that the time for debate under the five-minute rule be extended until 5 o'clock this evening.

Mr. MUDD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the question. And in no other respect shall the order governing the consideration of this bill be modified. Is there objection?

Mr. MUDD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to suggest, as a substitute for that request, this: I will ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee present certain resolutions or amendments that he has in his hand, and request that they may be considered as pending in the House.

Mr. HILL. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KNOX. I will say to the gentleman that I will agree that his amendments may be pending.

Mr. HILL. I will withdraw my objection, then.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request for unanimous consent in the interest of good legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There has been no partisan debate, no time unnecessarily consumed, and it is not a partisan question, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be returned to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and its consideration resumed there, and its consideration be concluded in the Committee of the Whole, and then it be reported to the House.

Mr. KNOX. I did not quite understand the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole and consideration be concluded therein, the bill to be then reported to the House. More than 30 sections of this bill have not been touched. Many of them are very important. A number of gentlemen have amendments in their hands ready to offer, the committee have amendments that ought to be considered, and every gentleman who desires to offer an amendment to some of these thirty-odd sections ought to be permitted to do it. We have plenty of time; we can resume the consideration and conclude the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole, and it ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself again into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to finish the consideration of this bill in that committee, and, when finished, to report it back to the House. The Chair assumes that the existing order will then be operative.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; that the vote shall then be taken in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOX. I shall make no objection on my part——

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, withholding objection for a moment, I do not understand that the request made by the gentleman from Tennessee is precisely as the Speaker puts it, but that we shall resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole for one hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. If it is understood that we are to finish the reading of the bill, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. That is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Accordingly the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 222, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MOODY, will take the chair. [Applause.]

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair, for the further consideration of Senate bill 222.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 222. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. PUGH was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Sixth. Be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion that took place on the amendment to the first line of this page, as to the time in which a voter should pay his poll tax before registration took place, gentlemen on that side of the Chamber attempted to take the position that the Republican party, especially the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], who last spoke, that the Republican party was not in favor of requiring the citizens of the Hawaiian Islands to pay a poll tax, and appealed to members on that side for that reason to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I am unwilling to let that assertion go unchallenged. I believe the Republican party in this House to-day voted right for once, when it voted against the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina to strike out the provision requiring these people to pay a poll tax before they voted.

There were but two votes cast against that amendment on the floor of this House, and every other member who sat here either voted to require the poll tax to be paid or in silence allowed his vote to be cast. You can not throw this mantle away from you. It is your duty, as you know it, as it is the duty of the members on this side of the House, to properly protect the elective franchise in that new Territory. You have done it, and like men you should stand here and take your responsibility. Furthermore, this bill provides that each one of these citizens should be able to speak, read, and write the English language, and the Republican party on that side of the House, as well as the Democrats on this side of the House, have just cast a vote recognizing that that should be done without division. Without calling for a division, you on that side have recognized that this should be the constitutional law in Hawaii. I congratulate you.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, who raised his voice against gentlemen on this side of the House, raising the point of order that their remarks were not limited to the precise question at issue, seems to be discussing an amendment which has been already acted upon and not the amendment now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama has been of great assistance upon the other side in helping us along, I was willing to let him conclude his remarks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I have concluded.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 62. That in order to be qualified to vote for senators a person must possess all the qualifications and be subject to all the conditions required by this act of voters for representatives.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend the section just read by inserting in line 15, after the word "senators," the words "and for voting in all other elections in the Territory of Hawaii."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows.

SEC. 64. That the rules and regulations for administering oaths and holding elections set forth in Ballou's Compilation, Civil Laws, Appendix, and the list of registering districts and precincts appended, are continued in force with the following changes, to wit:

Strike out the preliminary proclamation and sections 1 to 26, inclusive, sections 30 and 39, the second and third paragraphs of section 48, the second paragraph of section 50, and sections 62, 63, and 65, second paragraph of section 100.

In section 29 strike out all after the word "Niihau" and in lieu thereof insert: "The boards of registration existing at the date of the approval of this act shall go out of office, and new boards, which shall consist of three members each, shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, whose terms of office shall be four years. Appointments made by the governor when the Senate is not in session shall be valid until the succeeding meeting of that body."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not as familiar with this bill as possibly I should be or as members of the committee are. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is meant by "Ballou's Compilation?"

Mr. KNOX. That is defined in the first section of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is section 29 of that compilation?

Mr. KNOX. Section 29 has reference to the registration, and reads as follows:

For the purpose of examining applicants for registration as voters and determining their eligibility, there shall be five boards of registration, one for that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Puna, Hilo, and Hamakua; one for that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Kau, Kona, and Kohala; one for the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai, and Kahoolawe; one for the island of Oahu, and one for the islands of Kauai and Niihau.

I trust I make myself intelligible. [Laughter.]

Then follows this language:

Such boards shall consist of three members each, who shall be appointed by the President, with the approval of the Senate.

That we have changed, substituting the governor for the President.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point I wish to get at is this: This clause provides for the appointment of a board to consist of three members, to be appointed by the governor. It does not provide that this board shall be nonpartisan. All three members may be of the same political party. I take it for granted that we are going to have politics there, just as we have in the various States and Territories of our Union.

Yesterday we had a very learned discussion here, and my friend from Iowa—I am sorry I do not see him in his seat at present; perhaps he is listening to me, however—my friend from Iowa insisted that in no State or country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States would he ever consent that there should be a board with powers such as are conferred upon this board. He said that all such boards should be nonpartisan in their composition—that is, made up of members of the two great political parties.

I call attention to this provision in a nonpartisan spirit. I think it ought to be amended and that representation on the board ought to be accorded to both of the great political parties. I submit this consideration to the fair-minded gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KNOX. I agree fully that all registration boards and all boards in charge of the conduct of elections ought to be nonpartisan; each party should be represented. Under the old provision these registers were appointed with the consent of the Hawaiian senate; they had a voice in the choice. The trouble about any amendment to this provision now is that there are no political parties in Hawaii, so far as I know.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How long does the gentleman think that state of felicity will continue?

Mr. KNOX. If you are going to organize a Democratic party there, I have no objection to inserting such a provision. We have no Republicans there yet, so far as I know.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are not legislating for to-day merely; we are legislating perhaps for a long period. It has occurred to me that this board ought to embrace not more than two members of one political party. I do not know that there is going to be a Republican party or a Democratic party out there; I am not saying that. But in the interest of good legislation and fair elections, this board ought to be nonpartisan.

Mr. KNOX. If the gentleman will use his distinguished ability to draw an amendment to carry out his view, we on this side will support it unanimously.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOREING obtained the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will offer an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. That is just what I am going to do. I desire to offer an amendment to line 12, to insert after the word "each"——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOREING] has been recognized.

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Chairman, I very heartily agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I am very glad to know that he is so thoughtful and so fair-minded. I trust we shall incorporate his view into this law, and that it may be lived up to, and may be a precedent for the future.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will offer an amendment, unless the gentleman from Iowa does so.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer this amendment: To insert, after the word "each," in line 12, page 75, the words "not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party."

The amendment of Mr. LACEY was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts in charge of the bill if there is any reason for designating the sheriff as "high sheriff?" My conference with the people over there resulted in the belief that there is no reason for this designation, even though it is "English, you know."

Mr. KNOX. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that so far as I know the designation in this country has always been sheriff and deputy sheriff; but in Hawaii the custom has prevailed of having the head executive officer of each island called the sheriff, and in order to make a distinction we have called the principal officer the high sheriff.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand they have never had an officer designated as "high" sheriff heretofore. The designation has been "marshal."

Mr. KNOX. That is true, but we do it in order to preserve the title of "sheriff" on each of the islands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for the explanation.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 77, section 64, line 12, add the following:

"Provided, however, That for the holding of a special election before the first general election the governor may prescribe the time during which the boards of registration shall meet and the registration be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC LANDS.

SEC. 73. That the laws of Hawaii relating to public lands, the settlement of boundaries, and the issuance of patents on land-commission awards, except as changed by this act, shall continue in force until Congress shall otherwise provide: Provided, however, That all sales, grants, leases, and other dispositions of the public domain, and agreements concerning the same, shall be reported in writing each month to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall have authority to confirm, reverse, modify, suspend, and annul any of said transactions. That all of said transactions so reported upon which no action shall be taken by the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the filing of such reports in his office shall thereupon and thereby be confirmed and ratified.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and required to provide and promulgate the rules and regulations relative to all contests on the disposition of the public domain and appeals to him. That all sales, grants, leases, and other dispositions of the public domain, and agreements concerning the same, and all franchises granted in good faith by the Hawaiian government in conformity with the laws of Hawaii between the 7th day of July, 1898, and the 28th day of September, 1899, are hereby ratified and confirmed. In said laws "land patent" shall be substituted for "royal patent;" "commissioner of public lands" for "minister of the interior," "agent of public lands," and "commissioners of public lands," or their equivalents; and the words "that I am a citizen of the United States," or "that I have declared my intention to become a citizen of the United States, as required by law," for the words "that I am a citizen by birth (or naturalization) of the republic of Hawaii," or "that I have received letters of denization under the republic of Hawaii," or "that I have received a certificate of special right of citizenship from the republic of Hawaii." And no lease of agricultural land shall be granted, sold, or renewed by the government of the Territory of Hawaii for a longer period than five years until Congress shall otherwise direct. All funds arising from the sale or lease or other disposal of such lands shall be appropriated by the laws of the government of the Territory of Hawaii and applied to such uses and purposes for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Territory of Hawaii as are consistent with the joint resolution of annexation, approved July 7, 1898.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the following amendment to section 73.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 82, section 73, line 16, after the word "eight," add the following:

"And provided, That there shall be excepted from the provisions of this section all lands heretofore set apart or reserved by Executive order or orders by the President of the United States."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state that this amendment was suggested by the Department as necessary. Certain lands, since July 7, have been appropriated, by order of the Executive, for naval stations and other governmental uses in Hawaii, and the purpose of this amendment is to exempt them from the operation of this section.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does that apply to any other lands?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all, except those that have been actually taken for Government purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 73 the following:

"Provided, That all bona fide occupants of public lands who have improved the same shall, in the disposition thereof, have the preferential right in acquiring the same under the land laws of Hawaii as modified in this act, but such preferential rights shall not exceed 50 acres to any one occupant, and such improvements shall be not less than the appraised price of such lands."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, under the laws of Hawaii the acquisition of homestead rights is very carefully provided for by what are called homestead leases, running for ninety-nine years, which are open to all citizens of Hawaii or those who have letters of denization in Hawaii, and can not be alienated or taken for debt, the only requirement on the part of the homesteader being occupancy and improvement of the land.

Now, just pending this annexation resolution and about the time of it, a large number of persons, without any right whatever, without seeking any authority under the laws of Hawaii, which we continue in force and effect, forcibly entered upon valuable lands in Hawaii. They became, in other words, mere squatters. Now, it would be a very serious mistake to secure them any preferential rights by reason of mere occupancy of the land.

I think also that the gentleman's provision that the occupancy should be in good faith would not help the matter any. These homestead lands are valuable, and this bill seeks to preserve them to the real homesteaders. To confirm those titles in the hands of squatters who took possession of them, intentionally to violate or not to comply with the laws of Hawaii and the laws that should be enacted by the United States, would, in my opinion, be unwise legislation.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Are the crown lands reserved for the benefit of Hawaii, or do they become public lands of the United States?

Mr. KNOX. All the proceeds from sales or leases of public lands under this bill are for the benefit of Hawaii.

Mr. McRAE. This Government gets no benefit?

Mr. KNOX. We get no benefit from those sales.

Mr. McRAE. There are no lands which will become lands of the United States?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all, except what we have the right to take for governmental purposes.

Mr. McRAE. Does this bill propose to dispose of these lands under the old Hawaiian law?

Mr. KNOX. Under the Hawaiian law, subject to the modifications in this bill, that all transfers, sales, and leases under the Hawaiian laws shall be sent here and receive the approval of our Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McRAE. I do not think you can find a more objectionable land system anywhere than that which they have in Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. That is quite a large subject to discuss. It is a complicated system.

Mr. LACEY. Under section 28 of the land laws of Hawaii there is a provision by which lands may be taken for homestead purposes from 1 acre up to 60 acres. My proposed amendment limits it, in all instances, not to exceed 50 acres, but it provides that the land shall be taken up under the Hawaiian law and that persons who are now occupying the lands shall have a preferential right.

The purpose of this amendment is to meet this state of facts: A good many men have gone into Hawaii from the homestead regions in the West.

Out there you can locate a homestead on unsurveyed lands and get a preferential right when the land is surveyed. These men who have been accustomed to this system have gone into Hawaii, have gone into the brush and located homesteads. Under the Hawaiian law, however, they have no preferential right, and the question is whether they shall be put out of the clearings that they have made and somebody else take the land or whether they shall have the first chance at it.

I think it is to the interest of Hawaii to have this country thoroughly settled, and settled by Americans as far as possible.

Mr. KNOX. They have the right under the Hawaiian law to go there and settle.

Mr. LACEY. But the persons who are clearing the lands, who have actually made improvements, would, under this amendment, have the preferential right over somebody who has made no improvements.

Mr. KNOX. There are no such cases in Hawaii except those who took possession in violation of the law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not carry. I believe that the actual settlers and cultivators who have improved the land are amply protected under the laws as they have existed for a number of years under the republic of Hawaii.

The effect of this amendment is simply to give some sort of claim to a few men who have gone upon valuable land in Hawaii, who are claiming there without any shadow of right, who went on tracts of land after they had been surveyed by the government, after the government had built macadamized roads through those tracts, and after the government had started the process of sale and disposition under their laws. These men went on there in violation of the laws, and so far as I know they are the only men in all Hawaii who are asking to have their squatters' rights protected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They are "sooners," are they not?

Mr. MONDELL. They are "sooners." I have seen them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer an amendment to section 73.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso of section 73, on page 81, and also lines 11, 12, and 13, and the words "and appeals to him," in line 14.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of my amendment will be to strike from the bill that provision which refers to the Secretary of the Interior all transactions under the land laws of Hawaii, and that portion of the bill which provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations concerning land contests, etc. In my opinion, this provision is neither wise nor necessary. After a very careful investigation of the Hawaiian land laws, on the ground, and some study of the subject, I believe the laws of those islands passed in 1895 are well calculated to settle, develop, and improve the lands, and to place them in the hands of small holders.

I believe that a people who were wise enough to pass these laws, who for a number of years have wisely administered them, are fully competent to continue their administration. I believe that the land laws of Hawaii to-day are in many respects better laws, taking into consideration the conditions there, than the land laws of the United States are, taking into consideration the conditions here. The result of this proviso will simply be to refer to some clerk in the office of the Attorney-General here questions arising under the Hawaiian land laws. It will cause delays. It is not in the interest of the man who is seeking a home on public land in Hawaii.

This provision is not in the interest of the homesteader. It will give employment to a number of land attorneys here, and will simply tend to delay the settlement of land questions, and make it more difficult for the small holder, for the homesteader, for the man acquiring land under the land laws there, to have his matters settled promptly and without considerable cost to him. I believe this proviso should be stricken out, and I believe that Hawaiians should be left to administer their land laws in the future as they have in the past.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, this matter was discussed before the committee, and was specially brought to the committee's attention by the appearance before the committee of certain parties from Hawaii, who made the claim that the land laws as operated there were not satisfactory to the people who wanted small holdings, but were satisfactory to the people who wanted large holdings; and it was the object and intention of the committee in making this provision to meet the complaints of those who were here representing the small holders. We thought it was wise to leave the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, and thus protect the small man against the advantages that the rich man and large owner might have down there. It was admitted that it was not possible to extend all our land laws down there, as they are not applicable, and the only objection that was made was delay.

But it does not make any delay, because the sale or lease or transfer stands confirmed unless some affirmative action is taken within sixty days. The committee was unanimous in reporting this measure as a protection to those parties who would want small holdings as against the large sugar interests, and that is the object of this provision. I hope the report of the committee will be sustained in this body.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. KNOX. Debate has been exhausted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I trust that this provision reported by the committee, and which cares for the small owners there, may be sustained, and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming defeated. This check is a salutary one. I think it will prevent the abuses that might grow out of the conditions of Hawaii, and for that reason I sustain the provision as it is presented by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

SEC. 75. That there shall be a superintendent of public works, who shall have the powers and duties of the superintendent of public works and those of the powers and duties of the minister of the interior which relate to streets and highways, harbor improvements, wharves, landings, waterworks, railways, electric light and power, telephone lines, fences, pounds, brands, weights and measures, fires and fire-proof buildings, explosives, eminent domain, public works, markets, buildings, parks and cemeteries, and other grounds and lands now under the control and management of the minister of the interior, and those of the powers and duties of the minister of finance and collector-general which relate to pilots and harbor masters under the laws of Hawaii, except as changed by this act and subject to modification by the legislature. In said laws the word "legislature" shall be substituted for "councils" and the words "the circuit court" for "the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I rise in order to ask a question for information. I notice here, in lines 17 and 18 of page 88, these words:

In said laws the word "legislature" shall be substituted for "councils" and the words "the circuit court" for "the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank."

Did the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank have any judicial functions of any sort?

Mr. KNOX. I am unable to inform the gentleman. I think not. I think it was simply a proceeding about the deposit of public funds. The bill does away with the postal savings bank. That is entirely done away with in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. KNOX. I am unable to answer the question directly at this moment, but my recollection is it refers to the deposit of public money.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I asked the question because I thought it a clerical error.

Mr. KNOX. No; it is material. I can get the information in a few minutes. I think it refers to the deposit of public money in the savings bank.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 80. That the governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii, appoint the judges of the circuit courts, the attorney-general, who shall have been for one year actual residents of the Territory of Hawaii, treasurer, commissioner of public lands, commissioner of agriculture and forestry, superintendent of public works, superintendent of public instruction, auditor, deputy auditor, surveyor, high sheriff, members of the board of health, commissioners of public instruction, board of prison inspectors, board of registration and inspectors of election, and any other boards of a public character that may be created by law; and he may make such appointments when the senate is not in session by granting commissions, which shall, unless such appointments are confirmed, expire at the end of the next session of the senate. He may for cause assigned, to be communicated to the senate, remove from office any of such officers except the chief justice and justices of the supreme court and the judges of the circuit courts, who shall be removable by impeachment only. All such officers shall hold office for four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed, except the chief justice and justices of the supreme court, who shall hold office for nine years, and the judges of the circuit courts, who shall hold office for six years, and except the commissioners of public instruction and the members of said boards, whose terms of office shall be as provided by the laws of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out that part of section 80, on pages 84, 85, and 86, to line 7, inclusive, and insert the following:

"That the President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the chief justice and justices of the supreme court, the judges of the circuit courts, who shall hold their respective offices for the term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President; and the governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii, appoint the attorney-general, treasurer, commissioner of public lands, commissioner of agriculture and forestry, superintendent of public works, superintendent of public instruction, auditor, deputy auditor, surveyor, high sheriff, members of the board of health, commissioners of public instruction, board of prison inspectors, board of registration and inspectors of election, and any other boards of a public character that may be created by law; and he may make such appointments when the senate is not in session by granting commissions, which shall, unless such appointments are confirmed, expire at the end of the next session of the senate. He may, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii, remove from office any of such officers. All such officers shall hold office for four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed, except the commissioners of public instruction and the members of said boards, whose terms of office shall be as provided by the laws of the Territory of Hawaii.

"The manner of appointment and removal and the tenure of all other officers shall be as provided by law; and the governor may appoint or remove any officer whose appointment or removal is not otherwise provided for.

"The salaries of all officers other than those appointed by the President shall be as provided by the legislature, but those of the chief justice and the justices of the supreme court and judges of the circuit courts shall not be diminished during their term of office."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered to this section is the language which has been adopted by the Senate as section 89, and its purposes and objects are three: First, the bill as reported by the House committee provides that the judges of the circuit court shall be appointed by the governor of the Territory. The amendment which I have offered provides that the judges of the circuit court shall be appointed by the President. I wish to submit a reason or two for this change. Under our theory of government the three branches of government—namely, the legislative, executive, and judicial—should be distinct and separate from each other, and one not dependent upon the other any more than is absolutely necessary.

This amendment provides that the judges of the circuit court shall be appointed by the President. The amendment which is offered by the committee provides that the judges of the circuit court shall be appointed by the governor. The governor often has questions coming before the circuit court in which his position and acts must be passed upon, and if the appointing power rests with the governor the inevitable result will be that there will not be preserved that independence which ought to exist in the judiciary. Consequently it seems to me wise and proper that this appointing power should be in the President instead of in the governor of the Territory.

It is often the case that when the judge is an appointee of an officer whose actions may be reviewed the judiciary becomes simply the mouthpiece of the party who appoints him, and inasmuch as no one wants that condition to exist, these circuit court judges ought to be selected and appointed by the President.

The other change I have suggested in this amendment is as to the tenure of office. The amendment offered by the committee provides that the judges of the supreme court of the Territory shall hold office for a period of nine years, and that the judges of the circuit court shall hold office for a period of six years. We have laws concerning the Territory of Arizona, New Mexico, and all other Territories that have been admitted as States into the Union, having a Territorial form of government before admission. We find that the general law is that the tenure of office shall be for a period of four years in each of the instances, and it seems that we ought to have uniformity of laws with respect to the appointment of judical officers of the Territory of Hawaii.

These are the changes which I have suggested, first, in regard to making the judiciary independent, and second, making the laws relating to the tenure of office uniform with our laws.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman's amendment provide that these officers shall be citizens?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have put it in the language of the Senate bill. I am perfectly willing that they should be citizens, if the gentleman desires it. I adopted the same language that I found in the section of the Senate bill. The amendment offered is the exact language of the Senate bill as it comes here. It received very thorough consideration over there, and I understand was reported unanimously by the committee. I did not want to change any words relative to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Colorado that this provision received great consideration from the committee and very much more consideration than—if I may be permitted to speak of what has taken place at the other end of the Capitol—it did in the Senate. As the bill originally came from the commission appointed by the President, the provision was that the judges of the supreme court, as well as of the circuit courts, should be appointed by the governor, and that was supported upon the ground that the governor of these islands, 2,000 miles away from the shores of the United States, a man presumed to be acquainted with the members of the bar from whom the judges ought to be appointed, would be more fitted than another to decide who was best fitted to administer properly the laws of these islands.

Now, to meet the objection that was made against the appointment of the supreme court judges by the governor, and for an independent judiciary, the provision was made that the judges of the supreme court should be appointed by the President. The supreme court of Hawaii has final jurisdiction in all cases. There is no case in which the governor or any other citizen could be involved in Hawaiian litigation but what the questions arising could be saved by a bill of exceptions, to go to the supreme court, judges of which are appointed by the President, as the gentleman desires, for final adjudication.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the circuit judges? The supreme court of Hawaii is the supreme court of judicature of general jurisdiction, with power to hear appeals in civil cases, in equity, and in admiralty, and in all questions of maritime jurisdiction. There are five circuit courts in the island. Over these preside five circuit judges. They are simply nisi prius courts, which sit with juries and decide cases. To these circuit judges may come appeals from the district courts, which are simply justices' courts, with a limited jurisdiction of $300.

Questions of that kind may go to the circuit courts. They are not courts of last resort; all their proceedings may be reviewed by the supreme court on appeal or upon exceptions. They are local courts in every sense of the word, and they sit with local juries, which are drawn from the inhabitants of the island. Hence I think these judges would be much better selected by the governor, who is acquainted with the bar of the island, than by the President.

Mr. TERRY. Why do you give these judges so much longer terms than are given to judges in any other Territory of the United States?

Mr. KNOX. I was not now discussing the question of terms——

Mr. TERRY. That is involved here, however.

Mr. KNOX. I was not discussing that question. I will say, however, that our committee will propose an amendment as to the term of office.

Mr. SHAFROTH. One question upon the point on which you are now: Is it not a fact that these circuit courts are courts of general jurisdiction; that the appellate or supreme court is only a court of appeal, and, consequently, every question that may be presented to it must first arise in the circuit courts?

Mr. KNOX. In general, the questions going before the supreme court are questions arising on nisi prius trials. There are other questions, of course, such as questions in equity, matters of injunction, etc., that go in the first instance to the supreme court.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that these are courts of general jurisdiction.

Mr. KNOX. So they are.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And that the supreme court is the court of appeals.

Now, the point I wanted to make was simply this: That every court of general jurisdiction has before it at some time questions involving the conduct or the policy of the governor——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I ask a moment, with the indulgence of the committee. The gentleman from Colorado has had great experience in connection with Territorial governments and their operations—much greater than I have had—perhaps greater than that of any other member of the committee. I ask him whether, in the organization of any of our Territories heretofore, this power has been given to the President?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; in all instances.

Mr. KNOX. As to other judges than those of the supreme judges?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The supreme judges are the trial judges.

Mr. KNOX. That is not the question. Has the President appointed any judges in any of our Territories except judges of the supreme court?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are no other judges in our Territories except probate judges elected by the people.

Mr. KNOX. Here we have these circuit judges, who are judges of probate; all such matters may come before them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That might be; and if elected by the people, they would be an independent judiciary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the attention of the gentleman from Colorado for a moment. He proposed an amendment to strike out a certain part of this section which has not yet been read. Without objection, the remainder of the section will be read; and then the motion of the gentleman will be in order.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The manner of appointment and removal and the tenure of all other officers shall be as provided by law; and the governor may appoint or remove any officer whose appointment or removal is not otherwise provided for.

The salaries of all officers other than those appointed by the President shall be as provided by the legislature, but those of the chief justice and the justices of the supreme court and judges of the circuit courts shall not be diminished during their term of office.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the part of the bill to which my amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order.

Mr. CANNON. I want to appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] to move that the committee rise. Let the bill be finished to-morrow.

Mr. KNOX. If the gentleman will allow this section to be read through, I will not ask the indulgence of the committee any longer this afternoon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] rise?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire unanimous consent to discuss the pending question for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the Committee of the Whole for three minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado will be adopted. The provision of the bill which he proposes to amend is a departure from our past legislation for the Territories. I believe there are even stronger reasons why the judges in Hawaii should be appointed by the President than have existed with regard to the Territories heretofore formed.

The greatest danger in the new Territory, Mr. Chairman, is the danger of centralization of power, and this amendment is for the purpose of obviating, to that extent, that danger. I believe that whoever is appointed governor of the new Territory will thank this Congress to be relieved of the duty and responsibility of appointing judges.

I believe that we will have a better government there, a more satisfactory government, if we follow the rule which we have followed from the foundation of the Government, leaving the judicial appointments in the hands of the President.

Mr. KNOX. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey and Mr. FLETCHER demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. Did any gentleman demand a division?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 27.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, as many members of the House have engagements this evening, I do not feel like asking the House to remain longer in session. I would say in regard to this section 73 that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has an amendment which he desires to offer to-morrow. I will therefore ask unanimous consent that the section may be considered as still pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us the nature of the engagements of members this evening?

Mr. KNOX. I think the gentleman is informed as to that.

Mr. McRAE. I do not want to lose the right to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. KNOX. I have just asked unanimous consent that this section may be considered as pending in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The section will be pending unless the bill is still further read.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under the order that the bill be recommitted to the committee to finish the reading of it, is it competent for the gentleman to make the motion that he has now made?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order against the motion?

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the point of order?

Mr. HEPBURN. The point of order is that under the order of the House it is not competent for the committee to rise until the reading of this bill is finished.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There was no such limitation as that in my request.

Mr. HEPBURN. It was made at the request of the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. And I think the Speaker so explained it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I think not.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was a proposition made to recommit the bill for one hour. That was disagreed to. Then the gentleman asked that it might be recommitted to finish the reading of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right. You can finish it this week or next. We certainly fixed no limit.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that if the Chair will read the colloquies that were had and the request that was made he will come to the conclusion that it was the purpose of the House to require the finishing of the reading of the bill at this session.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asked that question, and said he would not object if that was the case, but that he would object if we were to close it in an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the agreement made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself again into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to finish the consideration of this bill in that committee, and when finished, to report it back to the House. The Chair assumes that the existing order will then be operative.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; that the vote shall then be taken in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOX. I shall make no objection on my part——

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, withholding objection for a moment, I do not understand that the request made by the gentleman from Tennessee is precisely as the Speaker puts it, but that we shall resolve ourselves into Committee of the Whole for one hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. If it is understood that we are to finish the reading of the bill, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. That is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was the agreement, to finish the reading of the bill, but no time was set within which it was to be finished.

Mr. STEELE. It was to go into the committee and finish the bill.

Mr. KNOX. With reference to the point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I understand that under the order made, at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union are virtually directed to resume consideration of this bill until it is finished, but I do not understand that that in any way prevents the committee at any time rising, and that when the House meets again this is the unfinished business, upon which it is in order, under the general order previously adopted, that the House shall go into Committee of the Whole to consider it.

I myself would be very glad to sit and finish this bill to-night, but I do not feel like asking gentlemen who have signified their desire to go away to sit longer. I am willing to sit and finish the bill, but unless there is a general agreement to that I do not wish to insist upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us finish it.

Mr. KNOX. But I do expect that this bill will be in order for to-morrow as unfinished business under the unanimous-consent agreement which we made this afternoon virtually carrying out the previous special order, which was not otherwise modified, that we shall go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow and finish this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is that the committee is bound to continue in session until it complies fully with the order of the House, which is to finish the consideration of the bill, and when finished to report it back to the House. The Chair is of the opinion that that order of the House to the committee is to finish the consideration of the bill in accordance with the rules applicable to this body; and in accordance with those rules the committee may at any time, upon motion and the will of the majority, rise, and at some other time resume consideration of the bill.

For that reason the Chair overrules the point of order and will put the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, merely for the purpose of furnishing information to the House. It is the understanding of those in charge of the bill, under the order adopted this afternoon by unanimous consent, recommitting this bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to consider it until finished, in connection with the order of the House previously made under which we were acting, that this will be in order to-morrow, under these two orders, as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. That would be the understanding of the Chair—that this will be a continuing order until disposed of.

Mr. STEELE. But that will not deprive us of the privilege of raising the question of consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The whole question is this: Suppose the House refuses to go into Committee of the Whole. In the first place, is it necessary to have a vote to-morrow to go into Committee of the Whole, or do we go into the Committee of the Whole under the order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the usual motion to go into Committee of the Whole will be necessary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A vote will be necessary, then. Very well; the House can refuse to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is the privilege of the House.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by members on both sides of the House to request a reprint of this bill, as no copies are now to be had and there has been a dearth in the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill S. 222. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reprint of the bill H. R. 8245, being the Puerto Rican tariff bill, as it came from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the Puerto Rican bill as it came from the Senate, with the amendments numbered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

ADJUSTMENT OF RIGHTS OF SETTLERS IN THE NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House may order a disagreement upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 4001, and ask a conference. I do this by order of Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4001) authorizing an adjustment of the rights of settlers in the Navajo Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona, with Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be disagreed to and that a conference be asked for. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair will appoint the following conferees: Mr. LACEY, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the permission granted by the House a few days ago, I now submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee submits the views of the minority on the Post-Office appropriation bill, in pursuance of an order heretofore made granting him that permission. They will go on the Union Calendar and be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SCUDDER, until Monday, on account of sickness.

To Mr. STEWART of New Jersey, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SALMON, for ten days, on account of important business.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in response to a resolution of the House relating to the annuities of the Sac and Fox Indians, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FOSS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10450) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 930); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEATWOLE, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. No. 31) authorizing the printing of the general summary entitled Review of the World's Commerce, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 931); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 24), authorizing the printing of the report of the cruise of the United States revenue cutter Bear and the Overland Expedition for the Relief of the Whalers in the Arctic Ocean, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 932); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 33) authorizing the printing of the Third Report on the Investigations of the Agricultural Capabilities of Alaska, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 933); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 29) authorizing the printing of the National Banking Laws, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 934); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 77) authorizing the printing of a special edition of the Yearbook of the United States Department of Agriculture for 1899, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 935); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 6, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, and having read the following entry:

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the following credentials of Joseph C. S. Blackburn, being a transcript from the journals of the proceedings of the legislature of the State of Kentucky in joint assembly, showing the election of Mr. Blackburn as a Senator from that State for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1901—

Mr. DEBOE. Mr. President, I was not aware of the fact yesterday morning when the Senator from Arkansas presented the credentials of Mr. Blackburn. I desire to know if they are now the subject of a reference. If so, I desire to move that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the reading of the Journal is completed and it stands approved, the Chair is of opinion that a motion touching the credentials would be in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I prefer that the reading of the record of the proceeding in relation to the credentials shall be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal, and was interrupted by Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have now no objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the reading may be dispensed with.

Mr. PENROSE. I renew my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. DEBOE. I now renew the motion that those papers be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the papers filed in relation to the election of a Senator from the State of Kentucky be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that motion will not be pressed this morning. I object to it now, if I have a right to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A single objection would not lie against the motion.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume the Senator from Kentucky would have no objection to allow the motion to lie over on the request of any Senator. I suppose he will not object to that course.

Mr. DEBOE. Let it go over, then, until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky withdraw his motion?

Mr. DEBOE. I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF INQUIRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 30th ultimo, the original copy of the minutes, proceedings, and findings of the court of inquiry pursuant to the President's instructions of February 20, 1899, together with the final report of said court of inquiry and the action taken thereon. The accompanying papers are very voluminous. The communication will be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of East Liberty Church, of East End, Pittsburg, Pa., and a petition of sundry citizens of Carlisle, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict American traders in the New Hebrides Islands from selling firearms and intoxicating liquors to the natives; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the continuance of the appropriation for the Hydrographic Office of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the legislative committee of the Pennsylvania State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for the enactment of legislation making oleomargarine and kindred imitation products subject entirely to the laws of the State, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lancaster, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation extending the time for confinement of live stock in their transportation from one State to another; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the legislative committee of the Pennsylvania State Grange, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called ship-subsidy bill unless a corresponding bounty be provided for on the exports of the staples of agriculture; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the First Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the First Baptist Church, and the First United Presbyterian Church, all of Oakmont; of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Second United Presbyterian Church, of Verona; of the congregations of sundry churches of East Smithfield, and of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Third United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors, opium, etc., in Hawaii; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Federation of Trade Unions of York, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 3009, regulating electric wiring in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Coopers' International Union, No. 101, of Allegheny, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation abolishing the using of revenue stamps for one-eighth and one-sixth kegs containing brewed or malt liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Glen Campbell, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Smethport, the Epworth League of Smethport, of the pastors of sundry churches of Smethport, and of the congregation of the Central Presbyterian Church of New Castle, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of the Free Methodist Church of Wessington Springs, S. Dak., praying to place in the new code of laws for Hawaii a provision that the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors, the importation and sale of opium, and that gaming be prohibited; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BARD presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Los Angeles, Cal., and a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Linden, Cal., remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TALIAFERRO presented the petition of Rev. J. E. Oates, Fannie L. Benson, and sundry other citizens, on behalf of the Woman Suffrage Association of Florida, praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of Addison M. Davies, of New York City, relative to his displacement as an inspector of customs, and praying for such action as will secure him the payment continuously of his salary as such officer; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wright's Chapel, Caroline County, Va., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Concord, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors and opium in Hawaii; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Second Presbyterian Church of Rahway, N. J., and a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Shirley, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens and in all Government buildings and premises; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. STEWART. I present a memorial to the Senate of the United States in the matter of a civil government bill for Alaska, being a brief on behalf of Charles D. Lane and other American citizens, owners of mining claims in Alaska. I should like to have an order to print it, so that we can all have it. It is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Printed in the RECORD or as a document?

Mr. STEWART. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to have it printed in the RECORD or as a document?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, as a document; not in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] secured unanimous consent of the Senate for the printing of a document—a memorial to the Senate of the United States in the matter of a civil government for Alaska. I desire to present a document, and ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in connection with the memorial presented by the Senator from Nevada. This document is a statement of the president of the Law and Order League at Council City, Alaska. It is a copy of a memorial addressed to the President of the United States, and contains some very interesting facts concerning affairs in that Territory. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the paper which he sends to the desk may be printed with the memorial which was ordered printed at the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KYLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to present a paper as a part of Senate Report No. 693, on the bill (S. 161) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriation for carrying the same into effect. It is an argument by John B. Bottineau, and is to be printed as a part of and attached to the report of the committee already printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2393) for the relief of Joseph S. Boss, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3415) to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys arising from leases made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2493) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for land in certain cases, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 394) for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of certain Pennsylvania military organizations, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 881) for the relief of Henry Halteman; and

A bill (S. 3328) to authorize the President to appoint and retire Richard Henry Savage with the rank and grade of major.

Mr. ALLISON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments the bill (H. R. 9139) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

I desire at this time to give notice that at the earliest practicable moment I wish to call up the bill for consideration. I present with the bill a written report, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule the report will be printed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 943) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Great Falls, Mont., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

NAMING OF A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report an amendment to Rule I, and I ask unanimous consent that it be acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Reported by Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Rules, to the Standing Rules of the Senate.

RULE I.

ART. 4. In event of the death of the Vice-President the President pro tempore shall have the right to name, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair during his absence; and the Senator so named shall have the right to name in open session, or in writing if absent, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond adjournment, except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the proposed rule? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Wherein does the proposed rule differ from the present rule?

Mr. SPOONER. It differs in this respect, that under the present rule the President pro tempore has a right to name in open Senate, or, if absent, in writing, a Senator to perform the duties of the Chair. That is a day appointment. The proposed rule provides that in the case of the death of the Vice-President the President pro tempore may in writing name a substitute presiding officer for so many days, and that Senator, if he is ill or absent, may make an appointment to hold one day, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the change a wise one. This is the report of the committee?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CORRECTIONS OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BACON. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report back favorably the resolution relative to the correction of errors in the Journal. The resolution was introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and I ask that it may lie on the table until his return, he now being absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution, submitted by Mr. HOAR February 16, 1900, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That when on any day the reading of the Journal or of any part thereof shall be dispensed with, it shall be in order for any Senator, when the Journal shall be read on any subsequent day, to call attention to any error therein, and to propose any correction thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed. The Senator from Georgia asks that it lie on the table?

Mr. BACON. Until the return of the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 4041) granting a pension to J. Lavenia Childs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4042) for the relief of M. L. Cline; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4043) to correct the military record of William Pritchard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 4044) to provide for the appointment of dental surgeons for service in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4045) for the relief of the estate of James C. Mosby, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4046) to correct the military record of John Frederick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4047) for the protection of the public health; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4048) to amend an act "Regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia," approved December 21, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHOUP (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4049) to authorize the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to build and maintain a railway bridge across Red River at or near the town of Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4050) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Goodwin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4051) to authorize the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company to construct a bridge over the Big Sandy River from Kenova, W. Va., to Catlettsburg, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment fixing the rank and pay of the Adjutant-General of the Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment fixing the rank and pay of the Commanding General of the Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $70,000 for continuing work of constructing quarters and other improvements at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the chief clerk at Army Headquarters to $1,800 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE FINANCIAL BILL.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 3,000 additional copies of the act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, said copies to be delivered to the Senate document room.

READJUSTMENT OF POSTMASTERS' SALARIES IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Pennsylvania between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled Robert Peysert and others vs. The United States, No. 18115, each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884, and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers, and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others vs. The United States, No. 16345.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. GALLINGER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any teacher in the public schools of the District has been censured or taken to task by a superior officer on account of the testimony given by such teacher during the recent investigation of the public schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I should be very glad to have the resolution passed this morning, I observe that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who objected to it yesterday, is not in the Chamber, and I ask unanimous consent that it may go over until to-morrow, not losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the resolution shall lie on the table without losing its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. NELSON. If the morning business is closed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution and will then recognize the Senator from Minnesota. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 23, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to morning business?

Mr. THURSTON. I desire to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota was recognized to make a request.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9713) permitting the building of a dam between Coon Rapids and the north limits of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., across the Mississippi River.

Mr. THURSTON. I shall not object to the unanimous consent as to this bill, nor will I object to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] proceeding with an argument in the Quay case, but I shall ask the Senate as soon as that is concluded to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill indicated by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THURSTON. I will yield in a moment to the Senator from Massachusetts, but I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7433, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest to the Senator to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the measure. There will be no opposition to that course.

Mr. THURSTON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7433) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THURSTON. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

CAPE COD LIGHT, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill of only three lines, and it is very important to commerce. It is the bill (S. 2883) to change the characteristic of Cape Cod light, Massachusetts.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to change the characteristic of Cape Cod light, situated at North Truro, Mass., from a fixed white to a flashing white light, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yesterday morning, Mr. President, I referred in some remarks which I made to an Associated Press dispatch, as I supposed, but I am credibly informed that the dispatch was not an Associated Press dispatch, which purported to come from Cuba, and therefore I make this correction. Neither did I in my remarks intend to cast any reflection upon the representatives of the Associated Press who report the proceedings of the Senate. I believe they are honorable men and undertake to and do ascertain the truth and report correctly.

However, the remainder of my remarks with regard to the Associated Press I reiterate, for I believe they are true; that is, that this association does employ irresponsible and untruthful men in many instances, where they make no effort to ascertain the truth of the statements which these people make; that this is prevalent in very many localities, and that it is a discredit to a very great extent to the news gathered by this great association. I believe also those representatives or reporters in many instances allow their opinions to be biased and their opinions to affect the news which they gather and give it a color and give it a tone which they think will satisfy their prejudices and the prejudices of the great newspapers that are in this combination, and it is a combination, and it is a combination largely to deceive the American people.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10449) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SETTLERS ON NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4001) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Navajo Indian Reservation, Territory of Arizona, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. STEWART, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MCLAURIN were appointed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 5th instant approved and signed the act (S. 739) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] temporarily.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave for the consideration of the bill (S. 1291) authorizing the settlement and adjustment with the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company of its indebtedness to the United States.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. In the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], I can not consent that the bill shall come up at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7433) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. THURSTON. I understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] desires to speak to the Quay resolution this morning, and if he does I am willing to yield to him for that purpose.

Before yielding to the Senator, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that on the reading of the bill the committee amendments be first considered and acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first acted upon. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, declaring that Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit briefly my views on the present case. I have carefully read both the report of the majority and of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections with respect to the seating of Senator Quay as a member of this body. I am absolutely clear in my mind as to the correct view—the one taken by the minority. The report of the majority rests almost entirely upon the precedents in such cases. The minority report criticises these precedents and rests upon the broader ground of a liberal and natural construction of the Constitution.

It seems to me that it was never intended by the framers of the Constitution that a State should be without full representation in the Senate. That is the only safeguard which a small State has as against the power and influence of a great State with many Representatives in Congress. Rhode Island, scarcely larger than a county, under the Constitution, is entitled to two Senators. The Empire State of New York and the great State of Texas are entitled to no more. In the very nature of the thing I do not believe it was contemplated that a vacancy should continue in the Senate from any one of the States. It is a very narrow construction of the Constitution which holds that if a vacancy happens during a session of the legislature, and the vacancy is not filled by the legislature, that the State must go unrepresented.

Suppose that at the very last hour of a session of the legislature a member of the Senate should die and the fact of such death was not known until after adjournment. Would it not be regarded as an extraordinary construction to hold that, because the death occurred in the last moments of the session of the legislature, the governor could not appoint and the vacancy must continue until the next session of the legislature? It may be said that this is an extreme way to put it. Still, if the argument of those adopting the narrow construction is true, then the governor would not have the power to appoint, and a vacancy would follow. There might be pending in the Senate of the United States questions of the most vital importance to that particular State where the vacancy had occurred, and yet that State would be unable to protect itself because of the narrow construction contended for.

I believe that whenever and however a vacancy in the Senate may occur, if the legislature of the State fails to elect, on adjournment of the legislature the governor could and should appoint (a vacancy then happens to exist during the vacation of the legislature), such appointment to hold until the meeting of the next legislature, and thus the rights and interests of the State would be protected. It has been said that the reason why the framers of the Constitution intended that the legislature only should fill vacancies, except where the vacancy happened between sessions of the legislature, is that the legislature more directly and closely represents the wishes of the people. I do not agree to this. The governor is elected by the people, just as are the members of the legislature, and generally both are elected at the same time and by practically the same vote. Both should be equally in touch with the sentiments of the people.

"Precedent," as was well said a few days since by the Senator from Nebraska, "is usually resorted to when there is no logic to sustain the contention of the person referring to the precedent. When neither reason nor logic sustain a position, one falls back upon precedent." While as a lawyer I understand the usual force and effect given to precedents, yet we even have cases where the same Supreme Court, upon similar states of fact, reverses itself—sets aside a precedent established for years. If the precedent is wrong, the sooner it is departed from the better. It should never have a controlling effect, but might be persuasive. I am of opinion that the proper construction of the Constitution is that which gives the governor the right to keep each State's quota of Senators filled when the legislature fails to elect. It has been said that if the legislature has had the opportunity the governor can not appoint. This is a curious position to take. If one of the two agencies of the people fails to discharge its duty, that that shall have the effect of completely destroying the interests of the people, which would be subserved by the exercise of the appointing power by the other agency.

Believing, as I do, that this broader construction of the Constitution is the proper one, I shall vote against the majority resolution and in favor of seating Senator Quay.

THE LA ABRA AWARDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the act of Congress approved December 23, 1892, a copy of which is annexed, the Attorney-General of the United States "is authorized and directed to bring suit in the Court of Claims against La Abra Silver Mining Company, its successors and assigns, and all persons making any claim to the award or any part thereof in this act mentioned, to determine whether the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission in respect to the claim of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company was obtained, as to the whole sum included therein or as to any part thereof, by fraud effectuated by means of false swearing or other false and fraudulent practices on the part of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company, or its agents, attorneys, or assigns; and, in case it be so determined, to bar and foreclose all claim in law or equity on the part of said La Abra Silver Mining Company, its legal representatives or assigns, to the money, or any such part thereof, received from the Republic of Mexico for or on account of such award."

In pursuance of the provisions and powers of this act, the Attorney-General did, on behalf of the United States, bring suit in the Court of Claims against La Abra Silver Mining Company et al; and on June 24, 1897, that court decided that the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission in favor of said La Abra Silver Mining Company was obtained by fraud and a decree was rendered barring and foreclosing all claim on the part of said company, its agents, attorneys, or assigns, to the money received from the Republic of Mexico on account of said award. A copy of this decision is herewith transmitted.

The Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, having affirmed in full the decision of the Court of Claims, the Secretary of State, in accordance with section 4 of the act referred to and the judicial proceedings above recited, and acting under my direction, on March 28, 1900, turned over to the ambassador of the Republic of Mexico at Washington the balance, amounting to $403,030.08, remaining under the control of the Department of State of the sum paid by the Government of Mexico on account of La Abra award.

I transmit a copy of the Secretary of State's note of transmittal, as well as a translation of the ambassador's cordial note of acknowledgment.

It affords me pleasure to communicate to Congress the accomplishment of this act of equity and good faith toward a friendly Republic.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 6, 1900.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7433) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Current and contingent expenses," on page 2, line 2, to reduce the number of agents of Indian affairs from 51 to 50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to insert:

At the Mission Tule River Agency, Cal., $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

At the Nez Perces Agency, Idaho, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 4, to strike out:

At the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to strike out:

At the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to strike out:

At the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 16, to reduce the total appropriation for pay of 50 agents of Indian affairs at the different agencies from $79,100 to $78,600.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, are the committee amendments being disposed of as we go along with the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What was done with the amendment on page 5, lines 20 and 21, which I see are proposed to be stricken out? They read:

At the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., $1,500.

Is that amendment simply passed over, or has it been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to; but it will be regarded as an open question if the Senator so desires.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think I should like to have that amendment go over for the present undisposed of, simply leaving it an open question; for I think I shall not be able to agree to that amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs. There is no good reason, so far as I know, why the Sisseton Agency should be abolished; at least, if there is, I want the committee to give the reason for doing it.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that the amendment shall be passed over for the present, but the reason for dropping that agency was on the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it was no longer necessary to have an agency at that point for those Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the amendment is to be passed over for the present?

Mr. THURSTON. I am entirely willing, as we go along, to pass over any of the amendments which will lead to discussion, so that they may be considered after the reading of the bill shall have been concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] asks that the amendment of the committee striking out lines 20 and 21, on page 5, may be passed over for the present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What amendment is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment striking out the appropriation for an agent for the Sisseton Indians.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment disposed of now if the committee desire to do so. I simply want to know the reasons why this agency should be dropped out. I was a member of the subcommittee who had charge of the bill, but I was sick when this recommendation was made. I was present when the bill was afterwards called up in committee, but I am not satisfied with the reasons given for the proposed change.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The reason given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for striking out the provisions for agents at the Quapaw, the Sac and Fox, and the Sisseton agencies was that they were not needed; that the agents had no service to perform except to pay out certain money to be distributed under the treaties. That could be just as well done by any other officer of the Government as to keep agents at those agencies for that one purpose.

If one of these amendments is passed over, I think they all ought to be passed over, that they all ought to be treated alike, for the committee recommended the striking of them all out for the same reason.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say, in reply, that at the Sisseton Agency there are about 1,700 Indians, I think, that have lands in severalty, but we have laws which restrict the leasing of their lands; and those laws provide that if any lease is made, it must be approved by the agent. Who is going to approve a lease or to take charge of the leasing of six or eight hundred thousand acres of land if the agency is abolished? That is the question I want answered. The lands can not be leased without the leases being approved by the agent, who is supposed to be there to protect the Indians, as we have laws which prevent the Indians from conducting their own business. Unless that question is answered I can not see why that agency should be abolished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the proposition was that the amendment should go over for the present. I think all three of these amendments ought to be treated alike. One ought not to be disposed of unless the others are; and if further information can be had before the Senate takes action on the amendments, it seems to me that would be the proper course.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let those three amendments be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The three amendments, relating to the Quapaw Agency, the Sac and Fox Agency, and the Sisseton Agency, on page 5, without objection, will be passed over. There is another amendment, changing the footing——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A change of the general result of the appropriations for agencies in line 16, on page 6.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That will be dependent on the adoption of the amendments on page 5.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I ask that, after the completion of the bill, the Secretary may be authorized to correct the totals wherever it may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 7, line 12, after the word "works," to strike out—and one of whom may be located by the Secretary of the Interior in the Indian Territory, and under his direction and authority may perform any duties required by law of said Secretary in said Territory;

So as to make the clause read:

For pay of eight Indian inspectors, one of whom shall be an engineer competent in the location, construction, and maintenance of irrigation works, at $2,500 per annum each, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow per diem pay to the inspector who was located in the Indian Territory under orders and directions of the Secretary of the Interior during the fiscal years 1899 and 1900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which sum an amount not to exceed $300 may be paid for the rent of an office for said commission; and the sums heretofore paid from annual appropriations for the expenses of the said commission for office rent, authorized by vote of the commission, are hereby legalized, and these payments, together with the payments for rent of an office in the current fiscal year, shall be allowed by the accounting officer of the Treasury Department;

So as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the commission of citizens, serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the act of April 10, 1869, $1,000, of which sum an amount not to exceed $300 may be paid for the rent of an office for said commission; and the sums heretofore paid from annual appropriations for the expenses of the said commission for office rent, authorized by vote of the commission, are hereby legalized, and these payments, together with the payments for rent of an office in the current fiscal year, shall be allowed by the accounting officer of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 4, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the accounts of Charles D. Rakestraw, supervisor of Indian schools, for the fourth quarter of the fiscal year 1897, and for the first, second, and third quarters of the fiscal year 1898, the sum of $108 expended by him for sleeping-car fares while traveling under orders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of Indian tribes," on page 11, line 23, after the word "reservation," to strike out "during the pleasure of the President;" on page 12, line 1, after the word "sixty-seven," to insert "if directed by the President;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "in all, $5,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of a school or schools upon said reservation, in accordance with third article of treaty of March 19, 1867, if directed by the President, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Choctaws," on page 13, after line 11, to insert:

To carry out the provisions of section 29 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, under the title "orphan lands," $2,696.40, the said sum to be placed to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund in the Treasury of the United States, and to draw interest at 5 per cent per annum, this amount being the value of 2,157.12 acres of land, being the unsold Choctaw orphan lands in the State of Mississippi, which lands, under the provisions of said section 29, were taken by the United States at $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 7, to strike out:

COLUMBIAS AND COLVILLES.

For employees, as provided in agreement of July 7, 1883, ratified by the act of July 4, 1884, $6,000.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee why that amendment is proposed?

Mr. THURSTON. That amendment was proposed by the committee on the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that that appropriation is no longer necessary; that any expenditures of that character which are necessary he can take care of out of funds otherwise appropriated in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Crows," on page 17, after line 2, to strike out:

For pay of physician, per tenth article of same treaty, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 4, to strike out:

For pay of carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith, as per tenth article of same treaty, $3,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 7, to strike out:

For pay of second blacksmith, and iron and steel, as per eighth article of same treaty, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 12, before the word "furnish," to strike out "This amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to" and insert "To;" in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "but no part of this fund shall be available except by the direct order of the Secretary of the Interior;" and in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

To furnish such articles of food as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may require, $15,000; but no part of this fund shall be available except by the direct order of the Secretary of the Interior; in all, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24, on page 18.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the committee to move an amendment to come in at the end of line 24, on page 18. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," at the end of line 24, on page 18, it is proposed to insert:

And to enable the Secretary of the Interior to anticipate five installments, third series, same agreement, $12,000; in all, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 19, after line 18, to strike out:

NEZ PERCES.

For salaries of two matrons to take charge of the boarding schools, two assistant teachers, one farmer, one carpenter, and two millers, per fifth article of treaty of June 9, 1863, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes," on page 20, line 7, before the word "treaty," to strike out "same" and insert "the," and after the word "treaty," to insert "of May 10, 1868;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of physician, two teachers, two carpenters, one miller, two farmers, a blacksmith, and engineer, per seventh article of the treaty of May 10, 1868, $9,000; in all, $99,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Pottawatomies," on page 23, line 1, after the word "cents," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that, by reason of age, disability, or inability, any allottee of Indian lands can not personally, and with benefit to himself, occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof, the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary for a term not exceeding five years, for farming or grazing purposes.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why that is proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. THURSTON. The committee very carefully considered the matter of leasing the allotted lands of the Indians. Our information leads us to believe that the effect upon the Indians of the leasing of their lands for agricultural purposes upon the whole has been bad. We feel that no extension of the right to lease or of the change of the terms for which leases may be made should be given. The law at the present time, in our judgment, authorizes leases as fully as we ought to permit.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is an extension of the term.

Mr. THURSTON. This is an extension of the term for which leases may be made.

Mr. TELLER. A provision like this has been in several appropriation bills, to my knowledge. I do not know whether exactly like this or not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not for five years.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps not for five years. I agree with the chairman and the committee that the general system of leasing Indian lands is bad, but this is a provision for those who have disabilities. I think if we would confine the leases to that class it would be all right. I do not wish to get into any controversy with the committee about it or to raise any particular objection. If the committee think this is the best thing to do, I will let it go, except to say that I believe myself in a few cases it is very important that there should be an opportunity to lease the land; for instance, an old man, an infant, or some one disabled. This seems to be confined to that.

By reason of age, disability, or inability.

Now, that, of course, means the disability or inability of the party himself to work the land. If the Department should construe it to apply to a disposition not to work the land, that would be a different thing.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I believe this provision which is stricken out is a reenactment of the present law, word for word, except that it extends the term of three years to five years. That was the only object of the provision.

Mr. TELLER. Oh.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. TELLER. I was under the impression that in the Indian bills we had had that provision. If that is all, I certainly do not object.

Mr. THURSTON. The existing law permits leasing for three years.

Mr. TELLER. Three years?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Three years.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 23, after line 8, to strike out:

QUAPAWS.

For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500; in all, $1,500: Provided, That the $1,000 of this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the support and maintenance of three or more public schools on the Quapaw Reservation, at such place as may be provided by the Quapaw Nation: And provided, That the present industrial school on said reservation shall be consolidated with the Seneca Industrial School at Wyandotte, in the Quapaw Agency: And provided, That the building and furniture now used for school purposes at the present Industrial Quapaw School, except such as may be required for the consolidated school at Wyandotte, shall be turned over to the Quapaw Nation by the Secretary of the Interior for the use of schools on the Quapaw Reservation: And provided, That such of said buildings as may not be required for a public school, where they now stand, may be removed by said nation to suitable places on said reservation, and $500 of the amount hereby appropriated shall be turned over to the Quapaw Nation to pay for the removal and repairing of said buildings.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to permit these provisions in regard to the Quapaw Agency to be passed over for the present without action.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is no objection to that.

Mr. THURSTON. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The provision will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 24, line 24, after the word "Indians," to insert "in Oklahoma;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said Sac and Fox Indians in Oklahoma the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available, out of the amount of money now to the credit of said Indians in the United States Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Sioux, Yankton Tribe," on page 30, line 16, before the words "Yankton Sioux," to strike out "two thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence and civilization of Yankton Sioux, heretofore provided for in appropriations under "Fulfilling treaty with Sioux of different tribes," etc., $35,000; in all, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Alsea and Siletz Indians," on page 34, line 2, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such of said Indians as receive their pro rata share of said fund under this provision shall not hereafter participate in the payment of interest or principal on that portion of the fund that shall remain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous supports," on page 37, line 3, before the word "support," to strike out "purchase of agricultural implements, and," and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Joseph's band of Nez Perce Indians, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 23, after the word "seeds," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "provisions, horses, horse feed, harness, and farm machinery, $20,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Sioux of Devils Lake, N. Dak., including pay of employees, and for the purchase of seeds, provisions, horses, horse feed, harness, and farm machinery, $20,000.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the committee to propose an amendment to the amendment, to be inserted at the end of line 24, page 37.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 24, page 37, it is proposed to insert:

The same to be immediately available.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "General incidental expenses of the Indian service," on page 38, line 22, to reduce the appropriation for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Colorado, including traveling expenses of agents, from $1,500 to $1,000.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator why they propose to strike out "five hundred" there? Had they any information from the Department in reference to it?

Mr. THURSTON. It was done on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that $1,500 is a very small sum when we consider that there are practically two agencies in Colorado, at some distance apart. There is an agency at Navajo Springs, but fully one-half of the Indians are 150 miles east of that by the methods of travel, and the agent must go back and forth between those two points. It seems to me that $1,500 is not too large.

Mr. THURSTON. I will say that the committee did not go into the consideration of the facts upon which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made his recommendations. We felt that he had those facts within his own knowledge and took his judgment upon it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is under consideration?

Mr. TELLER. The item on page 38, line 22.

Mr. THURSTON. My recollection now is that the Commissioner further stated to us that if there should be any deficiency in the appropriation of $1,000 he could take care of it out of his general appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. I will let it go, then, on that statement, without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 39, line 1, after the word "Territory," to insert "For two additional clerks at the Union Agency, $2,000;" and in line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $15,280;" so as to make the clause read:

Indian Territory: For two additional clerks at the Union Agency, $2,000; for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Indian Territory, including incidental expenses of the Indian inspector's office and for pay of employees, $13,280; in all, $15,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I gave notice some days ago of my intention to offer an amendment, to follow line 7, on page 39, authorizing the payment of certain warrants by the Secretary of the Treasury, which I will read, unless the chairman of the committee desires that all individual amendments shall go over until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. THURSTON. If it does not lead to any discussion I am entirely willing that the amendment shall be presented now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume it will not. I will read the amendment. If there is any objection to it I will withdraw it and offer it after the committee amendments are disposed of. I propose to insert, after line 7, on page 39, the following:

The warrants issued by the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation under an act of the national council of said nation of December 16, 1899, making an appropriation for the compensation and expenses of the Cherokee delegates to Washington to formulate an agreement with the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, in behalf of the United States, shall be paid out of the funds of the nation the same as other warrants recognized by said nation.

The reason for this is that on the recommendation of the Secretary the President disapproved the act of the council of the Cherokee Nation providing for the expenditure. It was a mistake, as I understand it, on the part of the Secretary of the Interior. At any rate, the commissioners came here at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. They have been here for two or three weeks now, negotiating with the Dawes Commission, trying to make an agreement for the division of their lands in severalty, and this amendment is intended to authorize the payment of their vouchers issued to them by the chief of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. THURSTON. If there is no objection from any other source, I am entirely willing to accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 39, line 10, after the word "agents," to insert "and pay of employees;" and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Montana: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Montana, including traveling expenses of agents and pay of employees, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "support and civilization of Indians at Uintah Valley and Ouray agencies, three" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

Utah: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Utah, including traveling expenses of agents, $1,000.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill why that amendment is made; whether it is on the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. THURSTON. It is on the same basis that I stated with respect to the others. It is on the recommendation of the Commissioner, who has stated that the appropriation, in his judgment, is unnecessary, and that if any money is required he can take care of that matter out of his general appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator another question. I do not find, in the hasty manner in which I have examined this bill, any appropriation for the Indians at the Uintah Valley and Ouray agencies, in Utah. How are they to be taken care of? This is the only item on the subject I have been able to find in running over the bill hastily. I want to say that there are about twenty-six or twenty-eight hundred Indians there, and we are under treaty with them, and I suppose there must be, either in this bill or in the general fund, some provision for them.

Mr. THURSTON. There are, of course, numerous cases in the Indian service where there is no special appropriation made in this bill, and those cases are taken care of out of the general fund at the command of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want these Indians left out entirely. They are Indians who went from Colorado over there some years ago, and some of them are very deserving Indians.

Mr. THURSTON. I am satisfied that the Commissioner has not overlooked these Indians or their care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 40, line 21, to increase the appropriation for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington, including traveling expenses of agents at seven agencies, etc., from $12,000 to $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "six;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "sixteen;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" in line 15, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "six;" in line 16, before the word "thousand," to insert "and forty;" and in same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided further, That this appropriation may be used by said commission in the prosecution of all work to be done by or under its direction as required by statute—

So as to make the clause read:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For salaries of four commissioners, appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1893, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, $20,000: Provided, That the number of said commissioners is hereby fixed at four. For expenses of commissioners and necessary expenses of employees, and $3 per diem for expenses of a clerk detailed as special disbursing agent by Interior Department, while on duty with the commission, shall be paid therefrom; for clerical help, including secretary of the commission and interpreters, $616,000, to be immediately available; for contingent expenses of the commission, $4,000; in all, $640,000: Provided further, That this appropriation may be used by said commission in the prosecution of all work to be done by or under its direction as required by statute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 21, after the word "law," to insert:

But it shall not receive, consider, or make any record of any application of any person for enrollment as a member of any tribe in Indian Territory who has not been a recognized citizen thereof, and duly and lawfully enrolled or admitted as such, and its refusal of such applications shall be final; but this shall not in any manner affect the provisions of the act of Congress of June 28, 1898, respecting the Mississippi Choctaws—

So as to make the clause read:

That said commission shall continue to exercise all authority heretofore conferred on it by law. But it shall not receive, consider, etc.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I remind the chairman of the committee that there is an amendment to be offered at this point.

Mr. THURSTON. I was about to offer it. I am directed by the committee to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "final," line 2, page 42, it is proposed to insert:

When approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is another amendment of which I have given no notice, and I do not know that it has been considered by the committee. I do not believe it has been, and I suppose, perhaps, it would not be proper to offer it here. It relates to the Mississippi Choctaws. I will offer it later.

Mr. STEWART. Offer it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By general consent I will read it, and if there is no objection it can be considered now, and if there is, it can go over until after the committee amendments are disposed of. I propose to add a proviso, as follows:

Provided, That any Mississippi Choctaw duly identified and enrolled as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall have the right, at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the Secretary of the Interior, to make settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and on proof of the fact of bona fide settlement they shall be enrolled by the said United States commission and by the Secretary of the Interior as Choctaws entitled to allotment.

I think the law has always been that any of these Choctaws returning to the Choctaw country or going across to the Choctaw country shall be recognized as citizens and have their rights. The point made by the nation against the Mississippi Choctaws being considered as members of the tribe is the fact that they remain in Mississippi. This simply holds this right of theirs open until such time as the matter shall be finally disposed of. I suppose there will be no objection to this amendment, but if there is I will let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think there is any objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it had better be passed over for the present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let it be passed over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I would have no objection to allowing any Mississippi Choctaw who should go to the Indian country of his own accord to register.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what this amendment proposes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But I want to examine the amendment very carefully, in order that it may not be the foundation of a scheme for a syndicate to bring over Mississippi Choctaws and have them register, and so get the land, and the syndicate be reimbursed from the land which might thus be obtained by the Mississippi Choctaws who come over. I should want to examine it and see that it is not possible that that thing can be done under it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall be very glad to have the Senator examine the amendment as proposed by me, which seems to be very carefully guarded; and I should like to have it printed, if there is an opportunity to have it done. I will send the amendment to the desk, with the request that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 42, line 6, to strike out "town-site commissioners, Indian Territory" and insert:

To pay all expenses incident to the survey, platting, and appraisement of town sites in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations, Indian Territory, as required by sections 15 and 29 of an act entitled "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1898, for the year ending June 30, 1901, $67,000, or so much as may be necessary.

Mr. THURSTON. At this point in the amendment, as directed by the committee, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the amendment first be read through.

Mr. THURSTON. I was about to suggest that the Senator from Arkansas has an amendment he desires to offer, which, I think, applies only to the proviso of this amendment; and if that is the case, I should like to complete this amendment down to the proviso and leave the remainder for further action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," line 13, it is proposed to strike out:

For the year ending June 30, 1901—

And insert:

For the balance of the current year and for the year ending June 30, 1901, the same to be immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask that that part of the committee amendment contained in the proviso be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read lines 9 and 10, on page 43.

Mr. THURSTON. I am also directed by the committee to propose an amendment on page 43.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 43, insert:

For temporary support of the Pima Indians, Pima Agency, Ariz., $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; in all, $31,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 43, line 11, before the word "portable," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in the same line, after the word "steam," to strike out "sawmills" and insert "sawmill;" and in line 13, after the word "same," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For operating one portable steam sawmill on the Nez Percé Indian Reservation, Idaho, and for necessary repairs to the same, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 14, to strike out:

For pay of physician, New York Agency, $600.

Mr. THURSTON. The item on page 43, line 15, which the committee has struck out is a matter in which the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] appears to be interested. He is not here to-day. He has presented the matter to me in such a light and has made such a good showing as to the services actually rendered by the physician at the New York Agency that I am inclined to believe that that appropriation of $600 should stand.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then let the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the committee striking out lines 15 and 16 will be disagreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Did not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs state that there was no occasion for this appropriation?

Mr. THURSTON. I think he did. The Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], as I stated, presented a detailed showing of the services actually rendered to those Indians by the physician at that point for the last year.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no further objection. Let the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is disagreed to. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 44, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "seventy-five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may employ such number of superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, not to exceed four, as in his judgment may be necessary to secure the construction of ditches and other irrigation works in a substantial and workmanlike manner; and also one clerk in the Office of Indian Affairs, at a salary of $1,000 per annum.

So as to make the clause read:

For construction of ditches and reservoirs, purchase and use of irrigating tools and appliances, and purchase of water rights on Indian reservations, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his control, $75,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may employ such number of superintendents of irrigation, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 16, to strike out:

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," to be allotted the land in said separate reservations as provided in said act, including the necessary resurveys, $10,000. [Reimbursable.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 24, to insert:

For the survey of lands in the Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in South Dakota, and for examination in the field of the surveys, the sum of $22,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 3, to insert:

For clerical work and stationery in the office of surveyor-general, required on surveys within the Cheyenne River, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in South Dakota, the sum of $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 15, before the word "appropriated," to strike out "hereinbefore" and insert "heretofore;" in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" and on page 47, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "sixty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For increasing the amount heretofore appropriated for the erection of said asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., the sum of $20,000, the said sum being in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1899, and the limit of cost for said asylum is fixed at the amount heretofore and herein appropriated, namely, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 19, after the word "cents," to insert "as itemized and set forth in Senate Report No. 582, Forty-fourth Congress, second session, at page 39 thereof;" and in line 22, after the word "available," to strike out "and to be in full of all demands of said Indians under and by virtue of said treaty;" and on page 48, line 4, after the word "cents," to insert

"and interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from May 6, 1899;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the terms of the twenty-fourth article of the treaty of February 23, 1867, with the confederated tribes of Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians, $25,504.96, as itemized and set forth in Senate Report No. 582, Forty-fourth Congress, second session, at page 39 thereof, to be immediately available, said sum to be paid per capita to said Indians by the Secretary of the Interior, or expended for their benefit in such manner and for such objects and purposes as he may direct: Provided, That before any payment shall be made to said Indians under this act the sum of $1,181.69 and interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from May 6, 1891, shall be deducted and paid to T. F. Richardville, or his legal representatives, on account of money loaned to said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 8, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the balance of awards made to the loyal Seminole Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with interest thereon, as per articles 3 and 4 of the treaty of March 21, 1866, and paragraph 14 of the agreement of December 16, 1897; and the sum of $186,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose: Provided, That if any of the said loyal Seminoles whose names are on the lists of awards as made up in pursuance of said treaty of 1866 shall have died, then the amount due such deceased persons, respectively, shall be paid to their legal heirs, and the acceptance of the sum hereby appropriated shall be in full settlement of said awards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question about the first part of that amendment—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the balance of awards made to the loyal Seminole Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with interest thereon, as per articles 3 and 4 of the treaty of March 21, 1866, and paragraph 14 of the agreement of December 16, 1897.

The question raised in my mind was whether this reference to articles 3 and 4 of that treaty might not hereafter raise a question as to what the amount of this award was, and whether this award ought not to be distinctly stated as being in satisfaction of those paragraphs of that treaty. If we open the question as to whether those awards may be opened hereafter, and interest charged from the time of the claim up to this time, it might amount to a good deal more than is now appropriated.

Mr. THURSTON. I see the force of the suggestion, and I will ask to have the amendment passed over. I will prepare an amendment to the amendment that I think will cover it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the last line of the paragraph, line 23, perhaps covers the case; but, if it does not, it will be very proper to have some other language inserted in the beginning of the proviso:

And the acceptance of the sum hereby appropriated shall be in full settlement of said awards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But that is at the end of the proviso, which proviso makes provision for the payment to certain deceased Seminoles, and this being in full might be held to apply to the claims of the families of the deceased Seminoles and not to others.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is possible. It would be very proper to guard that point clearly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, without objection, will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 48, after line 23, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out and distribute in the following manner the sum of $216,679.48, which amount was appropriated by the act of June 28, 1898, and credited to the "incompetent fund" of the Chickasaw Indian Nation on the books of the United States Treasury, namely: First, there shall be paid to such survivors of the original beneficiaries of said fund and to such heirs of deceased beneficiaries as shall, in such manner and within one year from the passage of this act, satisfactorily establish their identity and also the amount of such fund to which they are severally entitled, their respective shares; and second, so much of said fund as is not paid out upon claims satisfactorily established as aforesaid shall be distributed per capita among the members of said Chickasaw Nation, and all claims of beneficiaries and their respective heirs for participation in said incompetent fund not presented within the period aforesaid shall be, and the same are hereby, barred.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me that there has been a clerical omission in the language of that paragraph beginning with line 6 on page 49:

First, there shall be paid to such survivors of the original beneficiaries of said fund and to such heirs of deceased benficiaries as shall, in such manner and within one year from the passage of this act.

It appears to me there must have been something left out after the word "manner;" that it should read, "in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," or "as may be prescribed," or some words like those. I am not sure about that; the expression may be just as it should be; but it does not strike me that it stands as it should read. It appears to me it would be better English as it stands now to strike out the words "in such manner and," so as to make it read, "and to such heirs of deceased beneficiaries as shall within one year from the passage of this act satisfactorily establish their identity." I believe that that would be better, and I suggest to the chairman that he amend the amendment by striking out the words "in such manner and" and let it read "as shall within one year."

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator's suggestion is to strike out the words, "in such manner and?"

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURSTON. I think that is proper, Mr. President, and I accept that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 49, after line 18, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate, through an Indian inspector, with any tribe or band of Indians now occupying reservations for the allotment of lands in severalty and the extinguishment of the Indian title. And for said purpose, and to enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate through an inspector with the Indians upon the Rosebud Reservation, S. Dak., for a cession of the unallotted lands in Gregory County, S. Dak., and to negotiate with the Indians upon the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in the State of Montana for a cession of their surplus lands, and to negotiate with the Indians upon the Devils Lake Reservation in North Dakota for a cession of their unallotted or surplus lands, and to negotiate with the Indians upon the Pyramid Lake and Walker River reservations in Nevada for a cession of their unallotted or surplus lands, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of which sum the Secretary of the Interior may employ stenographers and necessary assistance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask whether, if that paragraph is adopted, after the bill has been reported to the Senate the paragraph would still be subject to amendment by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I am perfectly willing that it shall be adopted. I may wish to offer an amendment to it, and I may wish to offer amendments to some other paragraphs that stand in the same relation after the bill goes into the Senate. I simply wanted to know if I would have that right.

Mr. THURSTON. I will say that, under the request I made for the consideration of the committee amendments, I shall not object to any amendment being proposed afterwards, either in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate, to the clauses of the bill not amended or to those that have been amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments will be in order in the Senate.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that bill has come up every day. No one has yet appeared to be ready to speak upon it. I know of three or four Senators who desire to speak. There has been a good deal of debate already upon the subject. I have no desire to hurry the matter unduly, but I am anxious, of course, to get it disposed of, so as to make way for other business. I give notice that on Wednesday next I shall ask the Senate to take a vote or to fix a time for taking a vote, so that the bill may be disposed of. Now I ask that it be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that further consideration may be given to the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. What bill is that, I ask?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Philippine government bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7433) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 50, after line 13, to insert:

For payment to the Flambeau Lumber Company, $12,039.35, the same being balance due said company for improvements made on the Lac du Flambeau Reservation for school and reservation purposes under a proper authority of the Secretary of the Interior, to be paid for out of timber to be cut on school and swamp lands within said reservation, which timber was not cut on account of suit instituted by the State of Wisconsin against the lumber company, after the improvements authorized had been made, stopping the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 23, to insert:

For making necessary repairs of the Big Wind River bridge, on the Shoshone Agency, Wyo., $750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 3, to insert:

For purchase and construction of one portable sawmill for the Klamath Agency, Oreg., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 5, to insert:

For the construction and equipment of a telephone line from Chamberlain, S. Dak., to Crow Creek Indian Agency, Lower Brule Indian Agency, and Grace Mission, said telephone line to be constructed and equipped under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 12, to insert:

That the sum of $20,000, or as much thereof as may be found necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of paying the claims for subsistence and transportation money of all those Cherokee Indians who, under the treaty of 1828, known as the new Echota treaty, removed from the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and other States to the present Cherokee Nation in the year 1835, and prior and subsequent thereto, their heirs and lineal descendants, and who have not received any part of the $20,000 appropriated for the same purpose in the year 1835. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the above sum of $20,000, the sum of $53 to each Cherokee Indian who, within one year from the passage of this act, shall file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs his application, supported by proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior that he removed from the State of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, or other State to the Cherokee Nation, under said above treaty, in the year 1835, or prior or subsequent thereto: Provided, That where the original Cherokee Indian who removed from Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, or other State, is dead, the said above sum of $53 shall be paid to his heir or heirs, lineal descendant or descendants, pro rata, after he or they shall have furnished proof, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, that he or they is or are the heir or heirs, lineal descendant or descendants, of the ancestor named in the application; and all claims for such subsistence and transportation money not presented to the Secretary of the Interior, supported by satisfactory proof, as aforesaid, within one year from the passage of this act, shall be, and the same are, barred.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 20, to insert:

That the settlers who purchased with the condition annexed of actual settlement on all ceded Indian reservations be, and they are hereby, granted an extension to July 1, 1901, in which to make payments as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 53, to insert:

Fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, in payment of liabilities already incurred and for amount necessary to be expended in suppressing the spread of smallpox in the Indian Territory among those residents of said Territory not members of any Indian tribe or nation therein, all accounts to be first approved by the Secretary of the Interior as just and reasonable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 8, to insert:

To enable the United States Indian agent of the Pima Agency, Ariz., to pay the expenses incurred by the farmer in charge of the San Xavier Reservation in employing two attorneys to defend four Papago Indians tried on the charge of violating United States statute 5286, the sum of $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 14, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, on approval of agreements by him, to pay settlers for lands and improvements, to pay Indians residing east of Tongue River, Montana, for improvements, to construct a wire fence, to purchase bulls and heifers, to construct or repair buildings at Tongue River Agency, establish and build a subissue station, farmer's residence, and blacksmith shop at Tongue River, and to pay for certain lands, as recommended by United States Indian Inspector James McLaughlin in his three reports to the Secretary of the Interior dated, respectively, November 14, 1898, and February 3 and 16, 1900, upon investigations made under the provisions of section 10 of the Indian appropriation act approved July 1, 1898 (30 Stats., pages 596 and 597), $220,030.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 6, to insert:

For the erection of additional buildings, fencing, means of locomotion, and other purposes necessary to complete the establishment of Leech Lake Agency, Minn., $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the committee to offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 10, on page 54.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 54, add:

For printing and binding in two volumes not exceeding 2,000 copies of the digest of decisions relating to Indian affairs, authorized by Indian appropriation acts of June 10, 1896, and June 7, 1897, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to donate 30 copies to Kenneth S. Murchuson, the compiler of said digest, for complimentary distribution by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the committee to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just adopted add:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, on approval of agreements by him, to pay settlers for improvements, as recommended by United States Indian Inspector James McLaughlin in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, dated June 13, 1899, upon investigations made under instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, on March 14, 1899, $48,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the improvements being situated within the addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation made by Executive order dated January 8, 1900: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make no payment for any of said improvements unless, in his judgment, the valuation thereof as reported by said Inspector McLaughlin is fair and just: And provided further, That all of said improvements and the lands upon which they are situated in and near Tuba City, are hereby reserved for such school or other public purposes as may hereafter be decided upon by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Support of schools," on page 54, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and ninety-five;" and in line 54, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, $1,195,000.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that this bill has contained for several years the provision:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska.

I regret that the committee have seen fit to strike it out. I only want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the appropriation for Alaska is always very limited. There has been a demand greater than the appropriation for schools; and I am afraid if this is left out, they will be compelled to reduce some of the schools up there. I call the Senator's attention to it, and I hope he will look into it and, when the bill comes into conference, consider the matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 54, after line 17, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue rules and regulations governing schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, in the Indian Territory; to appoint such officers, teachers, and employees as in his judgment shall be necessary to the establishment and maintenance of good and efficient schools in said nations; and to pay said officers, teachers, and employees for their services and other necessary expenses of said schools from the funds of said nations: Provided, That in the selection of teachers merit only shall be considered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall offer an amendment, on page 54, in relation to the support of schools, after the committee amendments are disposed of, which will provide for taking care of the contract schools.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 55, line 7, before the word "in," to strike out "For purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, poultry, and so forth, for schools, $5,000;" and in line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and eighty" and insert "three hundred and ninety-five;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $1,395,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 21, before the word "plant," to strike out "electric light" and insert "a lighting;" and in line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out "in all, $26,100," and insert "for the construction of a new dormitory, $10,000; in all, $36,100;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 100 Indian pupils at Chamberlain, S. Dak., $16,700; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,200; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for erection of shops, $2,000; for a lighting plant, $1,200; for construction and extension of sewer, $3,000; for the construction of a new dormitory, $10,000; in all, $36,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 15, on page 56.

Mr. THURSTON. I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 10, on page 56.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "school," at the end of line 10, on page 56, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of additional land, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., for transportation of pupils to and from said school, for the purchase of additional land, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and for general repairs and improvements, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 57, line 9, after the word "at," to insert "The Riggs Institute;" in line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" in line 14, before the word "dollars," to insert "and fifty;" in line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert:

To be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior if contract can not be made with the village of Flandreau for adequate water supply at $1,250 per annum.

In line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven" and insert "five;" and in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at The Riggs Institute, Flandreau, S. Dak., $58,450; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,800; water rent, $1,250; for permanent water supply, $6,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior if contract can not be made with the village of Flandreau for adequate water supply at $1,250 per annum; in all, $69,500.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provision with regard to the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak. I wish to strike out in line 14 the words "for permanent water supply, $6,000;" then disagree to the committee amendment, and provide for $1,500 for rent of water in the city of Flandreau. That city has put in a water supply and connected it with this school at a very large expense. I am informed by the mayor of the town that $1,500 will not more than pay the cost of furnishing the water; and yet they wish to continue the service, because it helps this small town to carry on a better system and to have a larger plant than they would otherwise have.

Mr. THURSTON. I will say that the committee amendments were inserted on the advice of the Senator from South Dakota; but if he is now advised that the original provisions ought to stand, I have no objection to disagreeing to the committee amendments in that paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to disagree to the amendments reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be disagreed to, without objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, I move to strike out the words "for permanent water supply, $6,000," in line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that is all. That will correct the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the words "The Riggs Institute" to stand?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Those words are to stand.

Mr. THURSTON. All the other amendments in that paragraph are to be disagreed to but that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the amendment I have proposed the provision as to water rent will read: "For water rent, $1,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment has been agreed to in line 14, on page 57, striking out the words "for permanent water supply, $6,000."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; striking those words out.

Mr. THURSTON. And also striking out the committee amendment "to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be regarded as disagreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And the total will have to be changed to correspond with the reduced appropriation.

Mr. THURSTON. The total should be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks have been authorized, by unanimous consent, to change the totals where necessary.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 57, line 24, before the word "plant," to strike out "gas" and insert "a lighting;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Fort Mojave, Ariz., $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for a lighting plant, $3,500; in all, $32,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 2, to insert:

For construction and equipment in connection with the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo.: For a boys' dormitory, $12,000; for industrial shops, $5,000; for laundry, $3,000; and for a lighting plant, $5,000; in all, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For steam-heating system, $10,000, to be immediately available, this to be in addition to the sum of $5,000 heretofore appropriated for this purpose, which sum is hereby reappropriated; for a lighting plant, $1,200, this being in addition to the sum of $1,800 heretofore appropriated for this purpose, which sum is hereby reappropriated.

In line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-two;" and in the same line, before the word "and," to strike out "eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at Indian school, Fort Totten, N. Dak., $41,750; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,600; for sewerage system, $2,500; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for steam-heating system, $10,000, to be immediately available, this to be in addition to the sum of $5,000 heretofore appropriated for this purpose, which sum is hereby reappropriated; for a lighting plant, $1,200, this being in addition to the sum of $1,800 heretofore appropriated for this purpose, which sum is hereby reappropriated; in all, $62,050.

Mr. THURSTON. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment just stated. I understand that he desires an additional amount appropriated to that recommended by the committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I supposed we were first considering the committee amendments. However, if it is agreeable to the Senator, I will offer my amendment now.

Mr. THURSTON. I think perhaps we can dispose of it in a moment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 58, line 18, by striking out the word "one," before the word "thousand," and inserting "four;" and in line 19 by striking out the words "two hundred;" so as to read:

For a lighting plant, $4,000.

Mr. THURSTON. I see by the committee amendment that $1,800 has heretofore been appropriated for that purpose, together with an additional $1,200, making $3,000. Now, does the Senator ask for $4,000 in addition to the $1,800 heretofore appropriated?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My amendment is in conformity with the recommendation made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have here a letter from the Commissioner in which he says:

As stated above, the plant is lighted with dangerous kerosene lamps. With the cheap fuel which they have an electric-light plant could be maintained economically. In the appropriation act for the present fiscal year there is an item of $1,800 for an electric-light plant. This, in the very first instance, was an inadequate estimate, and, since the enormous rise in the price of materials entering into electrical construction, is so far below the true amount that I have taken no steps to utilize it. I feel satisfied that this item of $1,800 should be reappropriated, and also an additional amount to increase the total for an electric-light plant to $4,000 would be eminently right and proper.

Mr. THURSTON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that if he strikes out the word "one," in line 18, and inserts "two," he meets the recommendation of the Commissioner.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Precisely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota modifies his amendment in the way in which it will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, after the word "plant," it is proposed to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$2,200;" so as to read:

For a light plant, $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. The total should be changed to correspond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be amended by making the amount $63,000.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 58, after line 22, to strike out:

That the sum of $5,000 appropriated for steam heating and the sum of $1,800 appropriated for an electric-lighting plant at the Fort Totten, N. Dak., Indian school, by the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1900, is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1901.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for employees' cottage, $3,000" and insert:

For construction and completion of new school building, $25,000; for construction and completion of new hospital building, $5,000; for construction of barn, $1,500.

In line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "eighty-five;" and in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, $2,500; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; for construction and completion of new school building, $25,000; for construction and completion of new hospital building, $5,000; for construction of barn, $1,500; in all, $85,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 21, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for the completion of a new school building, $15,000" and insert:

For increasing the amount heretofore appropriated for the erection of a new school building at Hayward, Wis., the sum of $15,000, the said sum being in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose by the act approved March 1, 1899; and the limit of cost for said school building is fixed at the amount heretofore and herein appropriated, namely, $75,000, the same to be immediately available.

So as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 125 pupils at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis., $20,875; pay of superintendent, $1,300; general repairs and improvements, $1,500; for increasing the amount heretofore appropriated for the erection of a new school building at Hayward, Wis., the sum of $15,000, the said sum being in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose by the act approved March 1, 1899; and the limit of cost for said school building is fixed at the amount heretofore and herein appropriated, namely, $75,000, the same to be immediately available; in all, $38,675.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-nine;" in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "for dormitory building, $20,000," and in line 13, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., $29,225; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for dormitory building, $20,000; in all, $54,025.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment. I inquire of the chairman of the committee if I may do so now?

Mr. THURSTON. I am willing to have amendments now offered to the school provisions.

Mr. TELLER. On page 60, line 13, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

For the purchase of not exceeding 10 acres of land for the purpose of sewerage deposit, to be immediately available, $600.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator has submitted to me the necessity for this amendment of $600 for the purchase of land, and I am willing to accept it.

Mr. TELLER. I have a letter here from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I desire to have printed, so that the committee may have it before them when the bill goes into conference, asking for this appropriation, which came to me too late to be presented to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore Does the Senator desire to have the letter printed in the RECORD?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir; so that it will go in with the proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 23, 1900.

SIR: Knowing the interest which you have taken in the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., I have the honor to bring to your attention a matter which it is possible may require Congressional action. In the Indian appropriation act for the present fiscal year there appears an item of $5,500 for sewerage system. For some time I have endeavored to have the necessary plans and specifications for an adequate system prepared. On several occasions the superintendent has reported that it is impossible for him to get a proper system, or such a system as the school actually needs, for the $5,500.

He has finally, therefore, submitted plans and estimates for the same which contemplate the deposition of the sewage matter upon a 10-acre field, which he estimates will cost about $500 or $600. Although the engineer seems to think that his plant can be installed for the amount available, yet there is an air of doubt about the same, and also upon the part of this office. If an additional appropriation could be secured for, say, $1,000, for supplementing the present appropriation of $5,500 for this purpose, and also not exceeding $600 for the purchase of a sufficient amount of land to be utilized as a deposit bed for the sewage, it would materially help the matter. On account of the local conditions, of which you are probably better aware than I am, this sewage matter can not be emptied into either the Grand or the Gunnison River; and, on the other hand, if the proposed plan can be made successful, it will utilize the waste matter of the school in the irrigation and growing of crops on the land on which the sewage is emptied, rather than to pollute a running stream with it. The superintendent has not suggested this course, but in view of all the contingencies surrounding the same I am satisfied that without some additional help in this matter the best plans I can secure will only inadequately meet existing conditions. Should the above suggestion be crystallized into action, whatever amounts are given should be made immediately available in order that they may supplement the present system.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 61, after line 2, to insert:

For improvements at the Klamath Agency Boarding School, Oregon, as follows: For waterworks and sewerage system, $3,300; for construction of one barn, $1,043; for lighting system, $3,000; in all, $7,343.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 10, after the word "Kansas," to strike out "for transportation of pupils to and from said school;" in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and five;" in line 15, after the word "available," to insert:

For increasing the amount heretofore appropriated for the erection of a new school building at Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., the sum of $10,000; the said sum being in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose by the act approved March 1, 1899, and the limit of cost of said school building is fixed at the amount heretofore and herein appropriated, namely, $25,000, the same to be immediately available.

And in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twenty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for general repairs and improvements, $100,340; for pay of superintendent at said school, $2,000; for extending steam plant, $10,000, to be immediately available; for increasing the amount heretofore appropriated for the erection of a new school building at Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., the sum of $10,000; the said sum being in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose by the act approved March 1, 1899, and the limit of cost of said school building is fixed at the amount heretofore and herein appropriated, namely, $25,000, the same to be immediately available; in all, $127,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 62, to insert:

For the construction of a new schoolhouse, with girls' dormitory and sitting room attached, at the Lemhi Agency, Idaho, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., $50,100; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; for general repairs and improvements, $1,500; for erecting girls' dormitory, $20,000, to be immediately available; in all, $73,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 17, to strike out:

For the purpose of removing the Indian school now located at Perris, Cal., to a new and more suitable site at or near Riverside, Cal.

And insert:

For the establishment of an Indian school at or near Riverside, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the erection of an auditorium, $15,000;" and in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "seventeen;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for general repairs and improvements, $100,200; for pay of superintendent at said school, $2,000; for the erection of an auditorium, $15,000; in all, $117,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 9, on page 64.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 8, on page 64. It is an amendment recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I have his letter here, and ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 8, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of a farm of 160 acres, $6,400, to be immediately available.

So as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Morris, Minn., $25,050; for pay of superintendent, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,500; for the purchase of a farm of 160 acres, $6,400, to be immediately available.

Mr. THURSTON. I have seen the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the amendment, and I make no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest another amendment to change the total from $28,050 to $34,450, in line 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The footing will be so changed under the order which has been already made.

Without objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from Minnesota will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 23, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference, of a letter from the superintendent of the Indian school at Morris, Minn., relative to the advisability of securing additional land for use of said school, and in reply to your request for my views on this subject, and if I favor this plan, you desire me to send you an amendment which could be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill.

In reply you are advised that the Indian school at Morris, Minn., was purchased by the Government from Mother Joseph in 1897 for $14,519. The original proposition was for $15,919, which was for 80 acres on which the building was situated and 160 acres situated at a distance. During the pendency of the negotiations it developed that a clear title could not be given to the 160 acres. It was therefore eliminated, being valued at $1,400 and said to be not very good land. In view of the statements made by the superintendent that they have now only about 60 acres available for cultivation and this school is for an agricultural section of the country, including stock raising and dairying; that he has not adequate facilities for carrying out these ideas, he therefore thinks it necessary for an addition of at least 250 acres of land at a cost of $10,000.

The superintendent in his letter also refers to the act under which the Clontarf property was sold for $4,600, and desires this money utilized in the purchase of additional land. United States Indian Inspector Duncan has recently made an inspection of this school and refers to this subject as follows: That 80 acres originally purchased are not sufficient for the school and 80 more should be secured for gardening and the keeping of stock.

I am not prepared to recommend the number of acres proposed and the amount $10,000 recommended by the superintendent, but, in view of all the circumstances surrounding this school, feel satisfied that as originally contemplated at least 160 acres more should be given the school in order to round out its facilities and make it an industrial school suited to the environment of the pupils from which it must of necessity draw its support.

Carrying out your suggestion I would submit the following as an amendment:

Amendment proposed to appropriation act, H. R. 7433, Calendar No. 590: On page 64, line 8, after "dollars," insert: "for the purchase of a farm of 160 acres, $6,400, to be immediately available."

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES,
Commissioner.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 64, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the erection and completion of a brick dormitory, $20,000;" and on page 65, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "one hundred and fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 500 pupils at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., $83,500; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,800; for erection of an industrial building, $6,000; for the erection and completion of a brick dormitory, $20,000; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for purchase of 12.27 acres of land at $100 per acre, $1,227; in all, $115,527.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 16, before the word "lighting," to strike out "electric" and insert the article "a;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., $50,100; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,700; for water supply and sewerage, $2,000; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for extension to school building, $6,600; or addition to warehouse, $2,000; for a lighting system, $4,500; in all, $69,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 10, after the word "hospital," to insert "to be immediately available;" and in line 12, after the word "superintendent," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., $29,225; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; for equipment of girls' dormitory, dining hall, kitchen, and hospital, to be immediately available, $1,500; for construction of suitable quarters for superintendent, to be immediately available, $3,500; in all, $38,725.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 19, to insert:

For rebuilding and equipping the Winnebago School, at the Winnebago Indian Agency, Nebr., $40,000, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 5, to increase the appropriation for collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, etc., from $35,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 12, after the word "purchase," to strike out:

Provided, That funds herein and heretofore appropriated for construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigating may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended in open market: Provided further, That purchase in open market shall, as far as practicable, be made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

And insert:

Provided, That supplies may be purchased, contracts let, and labor employed for the construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, without advertising as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That as far as practicable Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 2, after the words "upon the," to strike out "reservation" and insert "reservations, or at industrial schools;" and in line 5, after the word "advisable," to strike out:

Provided further, That the Indians to whom lands have been allotted on the Yakima Reservation in the State of Washington shall be permitted to lease such allotted lands for any term not exceeding ten years upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

And insert:

And the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry this provision into effect.

So as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when practicable, arrange for the manufacture, by Indians upon the reservations, or at industrial schools, of shoes, clothing, leather, harness, and wagons, and such other articles as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable, and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry this provision into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 20, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the proviso to the act approved August 15, 1894, permitting the sale of allotted lands by members of the Citizen band of Pottawatomie Indians and of the Absentee Shawnee Indians of Oklahoma is hereby extended so as to permit the adult heirs of a deceased allottee to sell and convey the lands inherited from such decedent; and if there be both adult and minor owners of such inherited lands, then such minors may join in a sale thereof by a guardian, duly appointed by the proper court, upon an order of such court made upon petition filed by such guardian, all conveyances made under this provision to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and any Citizen Pottawatomie or Absentee Shawnee not residing upon his allotment, but being an actual resident of another State or Territory, may in like manner sell and convey all the land allotted to him.

That such proviso of the act approved August 15, 1894, as herein enlarged, is hereby extended to those members of the Citizen band of Pottawatomie Indians and the Absentee Shawnee Indians who were given allotments under the act approved the 23d day of May, 1872, and to their heirs; and any purchasers of Indian blood of lands sold under the provisions of the act last named, or their heirs, who may own other allotted lands under any act of Congress, may sell all the lands so owned by them in excess of 80 acres, the restrictions against sales by allottees under the act last named to others than the United States or persons of Indian blood being hereby removed; and all such conveyances shall hereafter be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

That the provisions hereof as to the sale of inherited lands by heirs of deceased allottees of the Citizen band of Pottawatomie Indians and Absentee Shawnee Indians are hereby extended and made applicable to the heirs of allottees of the Peoria and Miami Indians, who were authorized by the act approved June 7, 1897, to sell a portion of their lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have section 7 reserved for the present.

Mr. THURSTON. The question of striking out section 7 the Senator desires to have reserved for the present. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over. The reading of the bill has been concluded. Does the Senator desire to go back to the committee amendments which have been passed over?

Mr. COCKRELL. Are there any more committee amendments?

Mr. THURSTON. I believe that concludes all of the recommendations of the committee in the way of amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments on page 5 were reserved.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to recur to the committee amendment on page 23, which was reserved. From line 9, on page 23, down to the bottom of the page and over on page 24, down to the end of line 9, is the House provision. The Senate committee has recommended that it be stricken out, and I hope it will not be agreed to. I suppose the better way would be for me to offer my amendment to the text. I want a part of the text to stand. I move to strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 15, page 23, to the end of that clause, at the end of line 9, on page 24.

Mr. THURSTON. Do I understand the Senator desires that we disagree to the committee recommendation as to striking out down to the proviso? The Senator wishes it to stand down to the proviso?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; down to the proviso. Whichever is the more formal way. I thought I would offer an amendment to strike out that part and substitute for it and then disagree to the first part. The amendment I offer is the law of last year. It strikes me that the way I have suggested is the better way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is entirely in order. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning with the first proviso, in line 15 on page 23, all of the bill down to and including the word "buildings," in line 9 on page 24, and insert:

That all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency, in the northern district of the Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the town of Miami by the clerk of the said northern district of the Indian Territory or his duly appointed deputy in a book or books kept for the purpose: Provided, That the amout of money appropriated for pay of a physician and to maintain the schools in the Quapaw Reservation shall not be diminished during the fiscal year 1901.

Mr. COCKRELL. That simply provides a place which has heretofore been provided where chattel mortgages can be recorded and be a notice to subsequent purchasers, and then the provision is that the pay for the physician and the schools shall not be diminished.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there a clause in this bill to pay for a physician and the schools?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; it is in the general provision. This provides that it shall not be diminished. That is the only proviso there.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not understand this. Where in the bill is the provision for the pay of a physician to the Quapaws?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a physician to almost every Indian agency. There has been one there ever since I have known anything about it. The provision is in the existing bill, and all that this does is to provide that the amount shall not be diminished for that and for the education there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. I was just simply stating that there is a physician at almost every reservation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there is any provision in this bill for the pay of a physician there. There may be.

Mr. COCKRELL. I tell the Senator, and the records will show, that in the very language of this bill there will not be less than thirty physicians to Indian agencies. They have been from time immemorial, and they are paid for in this way.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator does not understand me. I think there is no specific provision in this bill as it stands for the pay of a physician to the Quapaw Agency. Is there?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is not in this bill; but it is already regulated and they have a fixed salary, and this simply leaves that salary so that there shall be no diminution of the provision for it at that agency. I think it is about a thousand dollars. My recollection is not clear. I do not think any physician gets over $1,200. That is my recollection.

Mr. GALLINGER. They average about a thousand dollars a year I should say.

Mr. COCKRELL. They average about a thousand dollars. I do not think anyone gets over $1,200, unless it has been increased recently.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not going to say very much about this amendment, because it brings up a matter which the committee has had no opportunity to consider; but this is true: I think that at this Quapaw Agency the Indians are just as thoroughly civilized as any American citizens are, and are living like American citizens, and they ought to be able to take care of themselves, and are able to take care of themselves just as much as white people in any portion of the rural or agricultural part of the United States. The committee, as I understood, thought there was no longer any necessity for treating them as Indians.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My recollection of what the Commissioner stated—I do not think I am mistaken about it—is that there is no occasion for maintaining the agent at the Quapaw Agency. These people all have their lands in severalty. They live on their several homes, just as people in other sections of the country do, but there are certain treaty agreements which we, at least for the time being, must carry out; for instance, keeping a blacksmith and carpenter in that country. There may be also a provision about the physician. I am not so sure about that. But the statement made by the Commissioner to the committee was that of the general fund—they having a large general fund for educational purposes and a large general fund for employees—provision could be made for these schools, just as it would be if this special provision were made; that there would be no difference whatever in any of the employees on the Quapaw Reservation and no difference whatever in the schools, both being provided for out of the general fund instead of a specific fund.

This is the only change made, except that he proposes to discontinue the agent. He said there is no occasion whatever for keeping an agent there; that the duties performed by him could be just as well and better and more cheaply performed by a special agent of the Indian Office. There is to be no diminution in the number of offices. There is to be no diminution in the amount of money used for schools, the only change being instead of there being a special appropriation in the bill for these two things they are provided for out of the two general items of employees for the Department and the general provision for schools.

I was sure this was the fact. My recollection was the same, and since this debate came up I went to the telephone and called up the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and was assured by him within a very few minutes that that was what he stated to the committee and what would be done by the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall have to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to have it decided now. It may as well be decided at one time as at another. Let the amendment be read. The Senator from Arkansas wants to know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 15, page 23, it is proposed to agree to the committee amendment striking out all of the bill down to the end of the paragraph, in line 9, page 24, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency in the northern district of the Indian Territory shall be recorded in the town of Miami by the clerk of the said northern district of the Indian Territory or his duly appointed deputy in a book or books kept for the purpose: Provided, That the amount of money appropriated for pay of a physician and to maintain the schools in the Quapaw Reservation shall not be diminished during the fiscal year 1901.

Mr. COCKRELL. That provision is recommended and indorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as has just been stated by the Senator from Arkansas. The latter part of it is exactly the provision that was in the act last year.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is not that the law now without reenactment?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because the provisions contained in an appropriation act expire with the expiration of the year for which they are made unless you put the word "hereafter" in the provision.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Sometimes they do——

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the universal rule.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And sometimes they do not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unless you insert in the provision the word "hereafter," the provisions all expire with the expiration of the fiscal year for which they are made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not worth contending about; but if a piece of legislation is put into an appropriation bill which has not anything to do with the appropriation of money, in my judgment it does not expire with the end of the year. But it is not worth contending about.

Mr. COCKRELL. My proposition is—turning to page 23—to strike out after the words "five hundred dollars," in line 15. Leave the prior provision in the bill. Then that provision and the amendment I propose will read as follows:

QUAPAWS.

For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500; in all, $1,500.

Now, that is verbatim the language of the law of March 1, 1899. The act of 1899 has in it this further provision as it is in my amendment:

That all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency in the northern district of the Indian Territory shall be recorded in the town of Miami by the clerk of the said northern district of the Indian Territory, or his duly appointed deputy, in a book or books kept for the purpose.

That is the exact language of the amendment I have offered, and I therefore simply move to reinstate the exact language that was used in the last appropriation act and then to add to it the words which will be read from the desk.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. So far as the amendment is concerned reenacting the language of the last appropriation act, we could agree, although I think it is entirely unnecessary. So far as that is concerned, if the amendment could be divided, I should have no objection to it, although I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the other proviso be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the amount of money appropriated for pay of a physician and to maintain the schools in the Quapaw Reservation shall not be diminished during the the fiscal year 1901.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is simply to do just exactly what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says should be done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know whether or not there is a physician there.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is none, he will get no pay. This does not create the office of physician there in any shape, manner, or form. It says that the expenditure for the physician shall not be decreased and that the expenditure for the schools shall not be decreased. That is all there is about it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Secretary again read the latter portion of the amendment?

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the amount of money appropriated for pay of a physician and to maintain the schools in the Quapaw Reservation shall not be diminished during the fiscal year 1901.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not understand that there is any appropriation in this bill or that there was in the last act for the pay of a physician at that agency. There may be, but if there is, I do not know where it is; and therefore that is entirely unnecessary. By the treaty of 1833 it is provided:

The United States also agrees to appropriate $1,000 per year for education purposes, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

And it also provides:

That the farmer and the blacksmith and the above appropriation for education purposes be continued only as long as the President of the United States deems necessary for the best interests of the Indians.

We propose to strike out all of the provision about——

Mr. COCKRELL. About what? It is all in the discretion of the President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. "Blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop," and "for education during the pleasure of the President." Those appropriations, in the judgment of the committee and the judgment of the Commissioner, have become unnecessary. These people are just as well able to take care of themselves as people in the town of Little Rock or any town in the State of Connecticut or in the United States, and there is really no reason why this gratuity to them should go on any longer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just one word. I do happen to know a little about this Indian agency. Here is the southern boundary of Arkansas, and here comes the western boundary of Missouri, and that agency is right in the angle adjoining Kansas on the north and Missouri on the east. The agency at the Quapaw Reservation has been practically at Seneca, a town in Missouri, just at the line.

There are nine tribes of Indians in that reservation. They are small bands of Indians; some of them are very intelligent and capable of taking care of themselves, and others are not. The agent at that agency for years and years has had the supervision of the contracts, and he has repudiated or rejected or refused to confirm a number of contracts for the sale of land. Only recently we had a case. One of my constituents there thought he had been mistreated by this Indian agent, and made complaints against him. He had an interest in land, and there was a controversy about who should get the contract, and the Indian agent had disapproved of the lease of the Missourian and he had also disapproved of the lease of another man who was contesting the claim. Upon application he sent an agent there. That agent investigated and returned and reported that both of the leases should be rejected, and that one of them had been obtained by the party going to the Indian chiefs and representatives and giving them $2.50 and $5, and getting the lease in that way—a valuable mineral lease.

Now, if that agent had not been there and those facts developed, those Indian lands would have been taken for a mere song, simply by purchase; and yet the Senator says they are as capable of taking care of themselves as anybody else. If he knew the conditions existing there, and how already some of these Indians have been swindled out of their lands—lands worth fifteen or twenty dollars an acre, being bought at five and eight and ten dollars an acre—he would not think that they were just as capable of taking care of themselves as he is of taking care of himself.

The Senator, if he will take any of the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, will see, and I am astonished that the Senator did not perceive that point, that they have had Indian agents from time immemorial, and he can not find in any Indian bill a mention of it, and yet the money has been appropriated. As every Senator living near where Indian nations are knows, there is a general appropriation from which the salaries are paid, and they are fixed from year to year by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is a physician at the Quapaw Indian Agency, and there has been for years. The Senator can not deny it. If he will look at the list he will see that there has been a physician there at $1,000 for years and years, as there have been at many other agencies.

All we ask in this matter is that the law of 1899, for the fiscal year 1900, may be reenacted in this clause and that there shall be no diminution of the amount paid the physician. If nothing is paid him, there will be nothing paid to him. The provision does not authorize anything to be paid to him. There is not an appropriation in the provision at all. It simply provides that there shall be no diminution of it. I ask that the amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me the committee had better recede from its amendment and take the law as it stood before than to agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. In the treaty made with the Quapaws some years ago there is a provision that, at the pleasure of the President, certain things should be done among the Quapaws. That has been repeated time and again. The Senator from Missouri now proposes, if I understand his amendment properly, to forbid that there shall be any reduction at all of this amount that we are paying at the pleasure of the President. The President may conclude there is no necessity for paying this money; he may conclude that there is no occasion for any of this appropriation to be used; but if the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted, he must pay the money anyway, whether he thinks it is unwise or not.

I think it is much better to get back to the old law and leave the matter absolutely within the discretion of the President than to go a step further than any other Indian appropriation bill has ever gone and provide positively that these sums of money shall be paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will amend the amendment by leaving out the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri modifies his amendment. It will be stated as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency in the northern district of the Indian Territory shall be recorded in the town of Miami by the clerk of the said northern district of the Indian Territory, or his duly appointed deputy, in a book or books kept for the purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will come in after the word "dollars," in line 15, page 23. Now read the clause as it will read if the amendment is agreed to and the pending committee amendment rejected.

The Secretary read as follows:

QUAPAWS.

For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500; in all, $1,500. That all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw Agency in the northern district of the Indian Territory shall be recorded in the town of Miami by the clerk of the said northern district of the Indian Territory, or his duly appointed deputy, in a book or books kept for the purpose.

Mr. THURSTON. If that amendment is to prevail, I desire to have it amended in line 10, in accordance with the language which we have used in other similar cases in the bill, by striking out "during the pleasure of" and inserting "if directed by;" so that it will read:

For education, if directed by the President of the United States.

I will say to the Senator that we have changed this language all through the bill in the case of appropriations carrying out similar provisions; and for this reason: If we leave the language "during the pleasure of the President," the matter will be overlooked and many of these appropriations may continue for years and years after all necessity for them has passed, while if we require the President to take affirmative action before the appropriations are expended, the matter will be considered and investigated and passed upon by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had not observed that language in any other provision.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is in all of them.

Mr. THURSTON. I will state to the Senator that we have changed the House provision in that respect in all places where that phraseology occurs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Every one of them.

Mr. THURSTON. I will call the Senator's attention to one or two in a moment.

Mr. PERKINS. There is one at the top of page 12.

Mr. THURSTON. At the bottom of page 11 we strike out, in the appropriation for the Chippewas, "during the pleasure of the President" and at the top of page 12 we insert "if directed by the President." There are one or two other amendments of the same character in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator moves that as an amendment?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be acted upon, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri as will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. By striking out, in line 10, on page 23, the words "during the pleasure of" and inserting "if directed by;" so as to read:

For education, if directed by the President, per third article of treaty, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the clause.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that the proposed amendment is to strike out all after the first paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. The proviso.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And to insert what the Secretary last read.

Mr. COCKRELL. To insert that one provision about the recording of deeds.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. And then to disagree to the first part of the amendment as amended on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator wishes to insert that, why not put such language in it as will make it permanent? I understand this enactment of law is made from year to year by this appropriation bill. It seems to me it ought not to be kept always in the Indian appropriation bill, and if we are going to provide for the recording of deeds in the Quapaw Agency, why not put it in such shape as not to make it necessary to insert the provision in every appropriation bill that comes hereafter?

Mr. COCKRELL. The only reason was that the Committee on Indian Affairs had, I understood, made a rule that they would exclude all legislation, and therefore we had to be content with the annual provision. I got that information from the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The rules of the Senate exclude all legislation from appropriation bills. I thought my learned friend from Missouri had known that for a great many years.

It was simply proposed in the Indian Affairs Committee to follow the rules of the Senate and to keep legislation off of this appropriation bill; but when the Senator from Missouri insists that we shall violate the rules of the Senate and the order of the committee and put legislation in the appropriation bill, I think it had better be made so as to make it permanent and not have to repeat it every time we pass an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to putting it in. I think that is a very good suggestion on the part of the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the proviso proposed to be inserted be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "dollars," in line 15, page 23——

Mr. THURSTON. Let us first strike out the proviso in the bill and get rid of that, and then let us disagree to the committee amendment striking out the first part of the paragraph. Then we can act on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (to Mr. COCKRELL). That is what you want to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is exactly what I want to do. The other, I thought, was the more correct way, but I have no objection to the course proposed. I ask, then, that we strike out all after the word "Provided," including the word "Provided."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on agreeing to the committee amendment striking out all of the paragraph from the word "Provided," in line 15.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I move to amend the other provision by the insertion of the clause which has been read.

Mr. THURSTON. Now, let the committee amendment be disagreed to, striking out the first part.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, let the committee amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment from line 10, striking out the words down to and including the word "Provided," in line 15, is disagreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not including the word "Provided."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not including the word "Provided."

Mr. THURSTON. The first lines of the section.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Down to and including the word "dollars," in line 15.

Mr. THURSTON. The first clause of the paragraph will now stand as amended by me in the first line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has already been made which the Senator offered touching the President.

Mr. THURSTON. Now, as far as the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is concerned, I have no especial objection to its being adopted, although I must insist upon the proposition that a matter of general legislation, whether included in an appropriation bill or found in any other act of Congress, is a continuing act and requires no reenactment, and it lasts until it is repealed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unfortunately, we have thought that in many instances in the Appropriations Committee, and the courts of the country have decided that the provision fell with the expenditure of the money. There have been recent cases of that kind. That is the reason why I wanted this put so that there would be no uncertainty about it.

Mr. THURSTON. That would be true with respect to any provision coupled with the appropriation of money; but this is a separate and distinct piece of legislation, having no relation whatever to any item of appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go in now and then there can be no question. If the Senator is right, no harm will be done.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And let the word "hereafter" be inserted, so that we shall not have any further trouble with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri by inserting the word "hereafter." The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert, after the word "that," the word "hereafter;" so as to read:

That hereafter all chattel mortgages executed in the Quapaw agency, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the same?

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that the text of the first portion of this article or section or paragraph has been amended upon the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. THURSTON. It has.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that we disagreed to the committee recommendation striking out that clause. I do not know whether that question has been put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps it would be as well for the Secretary to read to the Senate the section or clause as it now stands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well, beginning in line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Beginning in line 10.

The Secretary read as follows:

For education, if directed by the President, per third article of the treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty $500; in all, $1,500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to insert, after the word "treaty," in line 14, the words "if approved by the President," or "if directed by the President;" otherwise what is already in will apply only to education.

Mr. THURSTON. I think that is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to insert words which will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the clause that the Senator has already inserted apply to the whole provision? I understood the Senator from Connecticut to take that position a few moments ago.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Apparently it does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed the whole thing was in the discretion of the President, to be done as the President directed.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator's amendment is to make it clear that the action of the President applies to the whole clause.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I shall move to insert it at every other place. We ought to treat all alike. If it is necessary here, it is necessary in all other places. If it has got to go in here, I want it to go in other places.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have put it in in other places, wherever it depends on the pleasure of the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not find that in any of these places. It is all to be done if directed by the President. Now, let us have "if directed by the President," and "if approved by the President," put in all of them.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is not my motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the effect of your motion. You put in, in the beginning, "if directed by the President," and then you propose to put at the end "if approved by the President."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. COCKRELL. What amendment did the Senator offer?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. "If directed by the President" is what I proposed.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is already in.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not as to blacksmiths; not as to tools and iron and steel and the blacksmith shop. If the Senator will read the language he will see that it refers only to education, when it ought to refer to the whole matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection if you put that in like it was at the other places instead of putting it right after the words "for education." I do not remember the treaty. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas as to whether those things depend on the President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Here is the treaty; I read it a little while ago.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the language of the treaty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The treaty provides that—

The United States also agrees to appropriate $1,000 a year for educational purposes, to be expended under the direction of the President.

That is after the provision for the farmer and blacksmith, etc. Then it proceeds:

And the above appropriation for educational purposes to be continued only so long as the President of the United States deems necessary for the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then transpose the words "if directed by the President," inserted by the Senator from Nebraska, and put them after the word "dollars," so that it will apply to the whole provision.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All right.

Mr. THURSTON. That will be all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes it all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the clause as now modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

For education, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500, in all, $1,500, if directed by the President.

Mr. THURSTON. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nebraska in charge of the bill——

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "hereafter" is inserted in the other provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to as modified.

Mr. ALLISON. If this particular amendment is disposed of, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill, the chairman of the committee, to turn to page 5, that I may ask that the amendment in line 9 on that page may be disposed of.

Mr. THURSTON. That amendment was passed over. It has not been acted on.

Mr. ALLISON. It is one of the amendments passed over. I ask that it may be disposed of now and disagreed to. That agency, to my knowledge, is a very important one and essential to the Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. At what page is that?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 5, line 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. The committee report, on page 5, to strike out line 9, in the following words:

At the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, $1,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose that that is going to be done with all these amendments where we tried to diminish——

Mr. TELLER. That is what I am going to move to do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We tried to diminish the agencies where we thought they were no longer necessary. I suppose they might as well be all treated alike. If you get an Indian agency and an Indian agent, it is just next to impossible ever to dispense with one.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad that the Senator from Connecticut concurs with my view respecting this particular agency; but I wish to say to those in charge of the bill that there is no agency provided for in the bill of more importance than the one I ask may be retained.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I should like to say upon this subject that the three agencies which the committee propose to dispense with are proposed to be dispensed with upon the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that agents at those points are no longer necessary; but so far as I am concerned, when a Senator of the State where an agency is located stands upon the floor of the Senate and, in view of the information he ought to be in possession of locally, states that in his judgment the agency is necessary, I certainly shall not stand in the way of continuing the appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to move what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] agrees must take place, that all these agencies shall be retained. I should like to have any Senator take up the report of the Indian agent in the Quapaw Agency. I do not believe any Senator here after reading it will agree with the Commissioner that there is a condition at the Quapaw Agency that justifies the abandonment of the agent.

He is needed there. He is needed at every agency wherever we have had an agent, unless the Indians have died out. You still need Indian agents They deal directly with the Government. It is the only way that the Indian has to reach the Government proper, and particularly in sections of the country like the Quapaw Agency, where they are selling their land, I am sorry to say, and are allowed to do so when the Government approves of the sale. The only way the Secretary of the Interior will get any information is through some resident agent that will justify him in either approving or disapproving of an attempted sale of land. I think it is very important, and it is worth a great deal more than the small amount paid to the agent. I do not know myself of any agency in the United States that I think ought to be discontinued at the present time, and I am sorry to say that I do not believe you can discontinue them for a good many years to come.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the committee and stated that there was no earthly use for these three agencies; that there was nothing for the agents to do except to pay out the small amount of money sometimes, which could be better paid by an agent sent specially for the purpose, and which could be paid out more economically to the Government in that way; and that there was no reason why these agencies should be continued. That is the reason why I, on the committee, voted that these agents should be dropped out, and that is the reason why I would like to see it done now.

So far as the sale of land at the Quapaw Agency is concerned, I confess I know nothing about the facts. I suppose those sales can only take place with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not know.

Mr. TELLER. That is the fact.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then it would be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to have a matter of that sort fairly investigated whenever a proposition is made to sell land, and I see no reason why we should have a man present to facilitate the Indians in getting rid of their lands. It would make no difference to me if there was a considerable amount of delay and embarrassment in every application on the part of an Indian to sell a part of his homestead. If it took a special application made to the Interior Department and a man had to be sent down to look after it before it could be done, I think that the delay would be more likely to be productive of justice than injustice; and that it is not necessary to keep a man with a salary down there for the purpose of recommending to the Secretary of the Interior that he shall approve the sales that are contemplated by certain Indians. There seems to be nothing else for the Indian agent to do except that.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Arkansas assumes that I want to facilitate the disposal of land. Mr. President, I want to keep that agent there to prevent that very thing from being done. That is what I want the agent there for. If he is the right kind of a man, he will prevent it to a large extent; and he will see that the Indian who is going to sell his land gets what it is worth, which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he never does, unless there is some one there. You may send just as many special agents as you please; they have no interest in the Indian. A proper agent gets to have an interest in those people, if he is the right man. I think if the Senator will read the report of the agent at the Quapaw Agency, he will see that the agent is a desirable man to keep there, and that there is as much necessity for him now as there was ten or fifteen years ago.

Now, Mr. President, $1,400 is what we pay to the Quapaw agent. If there were 40 or 50 deeds sent up to the Department and every time a deed came to the Department a special agent had to be sent, it would cost five times that amount before we get through with it. The cheapest thing possible is to keep an agent there, and if the right men are appointed, which I am sorry to say is not always the case, the agent will be a protection to the Indian not only in that particular but in many others.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, Mr. President, all that necessary work for the Indian, if this agent is dispensed with, will be performed by the superintendent of the school there. That is in the bill; and that is why the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says that he can dispense with agents at these agencies. It is because the duties of the agents can as well be performed by the superintendent. It is provided here in the bill—

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may devolve the duties of any Indian agency upon the superintendent of the Indian training school located at such agency whenever, in his judgment, such superintendent can properly perform the duties of such agency.

Mr. ALLISON. On what page is that found?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is on page 6. We have a training school here in this agency; I think there are two or three industrial schools; and while, of course, I do not propose to contend when Senators come and insist that the agents must be retained, I do want to justify, as far as I may, the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that there is no earthly use in keeping them.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his testimony before the committee suggested that the agent for the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa could be dispensed with and that the duties of that agent could be transferred to the superintendent of schools there.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to find it. I find here "Indian appropriation bill, Senate Document 227," report of hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate in the consideration of this bill. I can not find any recommendation in the testimony by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the discontinuance of any one of these agents.

Mr. THURSTON. There were many matters upon which we asked the personal advice of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was with us at our sittings, that were not in any manner reported and do not appear in the hearings.

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs had that opinion, I have no doubt, when he appeared before the committee; but I am able to state that on further investigation the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has changed his mind upon that subject. I will not detain the Senate by stating the condition of the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to, and then I desire to offer another amendment relating to the same Indians. Has the amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee's amendment striking out line 9.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I am going to offer another amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us dispose of the other two agencies.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, the same argument needs to be made in favor of all three Indian agencies that has been made in regard to the one in Iowa, and I believe in being fair all around.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. THURSTON. Having disagreed to the committee amendment as to one, as far as I am concerned, I do not intend to insist on the other provisions being stricken from the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope, Mr. President, if it is established, as it seems to be by the action of the Senate, that the fact that an Indian agent has nothing to do is not a sufficient reason for abolishing an agency, that the same rule shall apply to all and that all shall be treated alike.

Mr. ALLISON. That fact has not yet been established; and if it is to be discussed here, it will take some time to establish it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs did state——

Mr. TELLER. I want to say——

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wanted to inquire of the Senator from Iowa, who states that he has seen the Commissioner of Indian Affairs since this testimony was given——

Mr. ALLISON. I have not seen him, and I have not made that statement.

Mr. CULLOM. But you have heard from him.

Mr. ALLISON. I have heard from him, but I have not seen him.

Mr. CULLOM. What I want to know is whether he thinks the provision should be reinstated in the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what his view is as respects that.

Mr. CULLOM. We ought to get rid of officials who are not needed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that this amendment may be disagreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I think all of these three agencies ought to stand on the same footing. From what we heard in committee, I believe there is just as much reason for retaining all three as for retaining any one. Therefore I am willing now that the committee amendment as to the Quapaw Agency and Sisseton Agency may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment on page 5, striking out the provision for the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T.?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is disagreed to.

Will the Senate agree to the committee amendment on page 5, striking out lines 20 and 21, providing for the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., at $1,500?

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Is there another amendment relating to the subject of Indian agencies?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The three amendments on this subject have been disagreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I merely want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. THURSTON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. In one minute.

The Senator from Arkansas said, when it is proved that there is nothing for an agent to do, we ought to get rid of him. I understand that. I do not care anything about the personnel of these officials. There are none of them in whom I am interested. They do not even belong to my political party.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am sorry, Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I know as much about this question, perhaps, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; I think I do, after my long service and my somewhat intimate acquaintance with those people. I know enough about the Indians of this country to know that there is no considerable body of them that do not need the kindly care of this Government, and who do not need somebody to see that they are not defrauded of their rights and imposed upon. There is not a single tribe of them that does not need such a relation between them and the Government as a decent agent furnishes.

I do not take this position, Mr. President, because I want to give somebody a place, but because I am familiar with what has happened under a system that I stood here day after day and protested against fifteen or eighteen years ago when it was entered upon—a system of allotment giving to these people lands in fee. I knew then, as I said then, and I know now, that unless the Government gives careful attention to it, just as soon as the Indians can get rid of their lands they will be landless tribes, no matter where they live.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am sorry the Senator from Colorado took offense at what I stated. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs came before the Committee on Indian Affairs and stated that no agents were needed at these three agencies, and he stated the reasons why they were not needed.

Mr. ALLISON. Did not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs expect that the duties of the agents would be performed by the superintendents of the schools?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certain duties.

Mr. ALLISON. And was not that the reason he gave why there was no necessity for these agents?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; certain duties that were required, which would take but little time, were to be performed by the superintendent of the school, as, for instance, the recommendation as to whether a sale of land should be ratified or not. It seems to me to be hardly necessary to keep a man on an annual salary at the Quapaw Agency to report to the Secretary of the Interior occasionally as to the price of land which might be disposed of now and then; but still, I am perfectly willing the Senate shall settle the matter as it pleases.

Mr. THURSTON. The number of agents should be changed in the bill. I move, on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "fifty" and insert "fifty-three;" so as to read:

For pay of 53 agents of Indian affairs, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 8, on page 65.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 8, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to place in said school, established for their benefit, such children of the Sax and Fox tribe of Indians in Iowa, without the consent of parents or other persons, as in his discretion should be compelled to attend school: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to pay to Push e ten neke que, head chief of the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi Indians, located in the State of Iowa, $500 per annum during the remainder of his natural life, beginning with and including the fiscal year 1900, in accordance with the terms of Article IV of the treaty proclaimed March 23, 1843.

Mr. ALLISON. The latter portion of the amendment relates to the chief of the Sacs and Foxes now with that portion of the tribe residing in Iowa. I have the article of the treaty before me, which I shall not take the time to read.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is any agreement, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. ALLISON. Article IV is as follows:

It is agreed that each of the principal chiefs of the Sacs and Foxes shall hereafter receive the sum of $500 annually out of the annuities payable to the tribe, to be used and expended by them for such purposes as they may think proper, with the approbation of the agent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that ever been done heretofore?

Mr. ALLISON. It is being done now as to two principal chiefs residing in the Indian Territory, but it has not been done hitherto as to the chief residing in Iowa.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to hear the amendment again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. ALLISON.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If that amendment is divisible, I wish to raise a point of order to the first part of it. The first part of it provides for compulsory Indian education; that the agent at a particular school shall be permitted to compel children to attend the school without the consent of their parents.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not give any power to the agent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it gives the power to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is pure legislation, as it seems to me, and is open to a point of order. If it is, I wish to make it. I do not think the remaining portion of the amendment, which is for the fulfilling of a treaty stipulation, is open to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is clearly divisible. On the point of order——

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Chair decides, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will withhold his point of order until I can have read a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The amendment was prepared at the Indian Office and sent to me. After the letter has been read, if the point of order is insisted upon, I will yield to it.

Mr. THURSTON. I will say, in reference to the point of order against the proposed amendment, that the committee were unanimous in insisting that points of order should be made to any proposed legislation sought to be attached to this bill by amendment, and the members of the committee on the floor of the Senate feel in duty bound to interpose the point of order wherever it can properly be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the committee for suggesting that no legislation shall go upon this bill, but I do not understand this to be legislation. The paragraph to which I propose to attach this amendment is a paragraph appropriating $14,025 for the support and education of children at the Sac and Fox Agency. I understand it to be not only a limit upon the appropriation, but a direction as respects the method of the appropriation. It is not a permanent statute, but simply a regulation respecting the Indians at a particular school.

Now I ask that that letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may be read, and then if the committee make the point of order, and if the Senate shall rule that an amendment of this character is not in order, of course I shall submit to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 30, 1900.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
United States Senate.

SIR: In the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1897 there appeared an item of $35,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of the necessary buildings for an Indian school for the Sac and Fox Indians located near the city of Toledo, in Iowa. In pursuance of that authority, a site was secured near the city of Toledo and 4 or 5 miles distant from the reservation. The necessary buildings have been erected and are admirably adapted for a school of 75 to 100 pupils—about the scholastic population of the Iowa Sac and Fox Indians. The school was opened in October, 1898. The enrollment during the fiscal year 1899 was 49 pupils, with an average attendance of 30. The enrollment for the first two quarters of the present fiscal year was 48; average attendance, 42. The monthly report for February shows enrollment, 37; average attendance, 31.

As you are aware, the Indians living on the Iowa Sac and Fox Reservation are in as backward a state as when Columbus discovered America. They are doubtless further removed from civilization in habits, manners, and customs than any other tribe under the jurisdiction of this office. Their chiefs and headmen are bitterly opposed to the education of their children, knowing that education means the taking away of many of their own rights and privileges. The Superintendent of Indian Schools recently made a visit to this reservation, and she reports them to be in a state of squalor and savagery. This reservation is surrounded by the highest types of American civilization, almost in sight of two of the most thriving cities in the great State of Iowa. This office has made through its agent and superintendent the most strenuous efforts to induce these benighted Indians to patronize the school established by Congress for their own peculiar benefit.

Inspector McLaughlin was sent by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of persuading them to send their children to school, but his report indicates that he made no progress whatever in that direction. Both the present agent and his predecessor offered every legitimate inducement to persuade the parents and others to abandon their old-time prejudices and adopt the civilizing influences of a school for their children. After two years' efforts it seems that this Department is no nearer a solution of the problem than it was at the outset. And to complicate matters further, on December 29, 1899, in the matter of habeas corpus proceedings with reference to an Indian girl who had been placed in this school, it was decided by the Federal court that this office was powerless through its representatives to continue this girl in the Sac and Fox school. The result of this decision has been to intensify the feeling of the nonprogressive element against the school.

Under the present policy of the Department and of Congress, as soon as the Indian has arrived at that state of advancement when he can be trusted, although partially, with his own material interests, he is urged to accept an allotment. The difficulty of teaching the old Indian, naturally conservative and averse to the white man's ways, the value of education with reference to that allotment is readily apparent. On the other hand, such a difficulty is not met with in the preparation of his child, and therefore I consider it as axiomatic that the duty of the Government requires, if necessary, its strong hand to force an ignorant parent to allow his child those advantages which will be not only of absolute benefit to himself, but also an element of safety to the perpetuity of its own institutions.

Many of the most enlightened States of this Union are required by the necessities of ignorant parents to enact compulsory school legislation. If such a course is necessary for the white parents, of how much more importance is it when dealing with a race of people sunk in savagery and hostile to their own best interests? Therefore I am of opinion that the Government can not prove recreant in its duty by permitting such a blot upon the State of Iowa as that which is comprised within the limits of this reservation, situated amidst civilization, enlightenment, and refinement. I am unable, therefore, to find a place where remedial measures are more absolutely necessary than in the case in point.

In relation to the Sac and Fox of Mississippi Indians in Iowa, and their attitude as above outlined toward the school at that place, the propriety of paying the head chief a pension of $500 has been suggested. I find that the treaty with the Sacs and Foxes proclaimed March 23, 1843 (7 Stats., 597), has the following article.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have already read the treaty provision, and it need not be again read. The Secretary has read the important portion of the letter.

From that letter will be seen the real position of the Indian children at the Sac and Fox Agency, numbering of the school age about 100. Those Indians, 400 in all, are in the midst of a densely populated region in my State, where they formerly roamed and had their chief station. They were removed by the United States first to Kansas and afterwards to the Indian Territory. A portion of them, with one of their principal chiefs, returned from Kansas to their old home in Iowa, and used a large portion of their annuities for the purpose of purchasing land in that State. They have lived there now for nearly forty years, certainly for thirty-five years, in their old home in Iowa. They purchased this land, amounting to 4,000 acres, in the midst of a rich agricultural country.

Their living there has been recognized not only by the Indian Department of the Government, but for many years they have received their per capita portion of the annuities granted to the Sacs and Foxes under the various treaties. They have had during all these years an agent. From the letter which has been read it will be seen that they are in need of an agent, if any Indian tribe in the United States is in need of one. The State of Iowa has no authority or control over them, having, at the request of the General Government, ceded to the United States its authority over that portion of the reservation of which these Indians have possession.

Mr. President, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated the conditions there. The Government of the United States is the only Government that has any control over those Indians. As is stated in the letter which has been read, the district judge of the United States court, under a writ of habeas corpus, has declared that these Indians can do as they will without further legislation of Congress. Therefore, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has asked that this legislation may be agreed to; it is legislation which will be executed in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is not likely to exercise it arbitrarily or unjustly.

I submit the matter to the Senate, if it is in order, and hope that it will be adopted so that we may see if it is possible to exert this mild influence over these Indians in the midst of this civilized region of Iowa to induce them to attend a school which has been prepared for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] demanded a division of the amendment, and the Chair held that it was divisible.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut makes the point of order against the first clause of the amendment. Will the Senator state his point of order?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The point of order is that the amendment is legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will modify the amendment by saying in the beginning of it "in the expenditure of the foregoing appropriation."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to know what the amendment now is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "dollars," in line 8, on page 65, to insert the following:

Provided, That in the expenditure of the foregoing appropriation the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to place in said school, established for their benefit, such children of the Sac and Fox tribe of Indians in Iowa, without the consent of parents or other persons, as, in his discretion, should be compelled to attend school.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not think that that relieves the amendment from the point of order. It is not a condition or a limitation; it is not a condition under which the money is to be expended, nor a limitation upon the expenditure of the money. It does not provide that if the children do not attend the school the money is not to be paid. I think it is stretching very far what we have sometimes allowed to be done, putting conditions and limitations upon the expenditure of money. It is, not to use any offensive words, trying to get around the point of order by something that looks very much like a subterfuge.

But while I am on my feet I think I ought to say one word about the proposition that is contained here. This question of compulsory Indian education is a very large question. It has created a great deal of discussion and a good deal of disturbance among the Indian agencies of the country. If we are going to enact legislation providing for the compulsory education of the Indian children, we ought to do it with reference to the whole country and not with reference to a single school. This legislation is for a single school.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am very much obliged to the President of the Senate for requiring order in the Chamber. I know the subject which I am speaking of now is not one in which Senators are interested——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is impossible to hear what is going on in the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not blame Senators for not being interested in this subject, although I wish they were interested in it.

As I was saying, this matter of compulsory Indian education is a very large subject. It has been claimed by some who have the interest of the Indians at heart that we ought to provide by general enactment that the Commissioner should have power to compel the Indian pupils to attend the Government schools without the consent of their parents. There have been some efforts made in that direction without law, and those efforts have resulted in serious disturbances, in which it has been found necessary, I think, to call out soldiers to repress the disturbances. Certainly a matter of this magnitude, and about which there is this division of opinion in the country, ought not to be applied to one single school in the United States, even if the amendment be in order.

There is one other view of this case that I should like to allude to. This is the first time that these appropriation bills have been considered by any committee except the Committee on Appropriations. Until this session all appropriation bills, including the Indian appropriation bill, have been considered by one committee; and you will remember, Mr. President, and other Senators will remember, the strenuous objection that has been made heretofore in this Chamber to taking away any of the appropriation bills from the Committee on Appropriations and giving them to the committees that have had charge of the particular subjects, like the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs, etc. The argument has always been that the other committees would not guard so carefully the appropriation bills as would the Committee on Appropriations, with its great experience and its great disposition to keep the appropriation bills within the limit of the rules; and I must confess, Mr. President, that it comes to me as a surprise, when this committee has insisted that nothing should go on the Indian appropriation bill except for the purpose of fulfilling treaty stipulations and carrying out the law, and it has managed to prune it so that practically no money is appropriated except for that purpose, that it should be the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who, without submitting his proposed amendment to the Committee on Indian Affairs, should come here and propose an amendment which I think is legislation upon an appropriation bill. I trust that the effort of this committee to keep legislation off of this bill will be seconded by the Senate, that we may not open the doors through which all kinds of legislation can find a place upon the Indian appropriation bill as they have in times past.

Now, recurring to the question, I say again that I do not think the modification of the amendment in any way relieves it from the point of order that it is general legislation.

I make another point of order, Mr. President, that no amendment shall be received to an appropriation bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the first point of order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then I do not need to make another, though it is open to another point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will be able to show on two, three, or four grounds that the amendment is not admissible. I want to say one word, the Chair having ruled out the amendment, as I understand

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first clause of the amendment has been ruled out.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say a word, if the Senator from Connecticut will allow me. The Senator will bear in mind that for two weeks he has been absent on a great public service, in the discharge of a great public duty, and that it was impossible for me to consult him personally. I did consult the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs on this amendment, and he said he preferred that I should offer it on the floor rather than that it should be taken charge of by the committee. I, of course, offered it in the best of faith, with a view of trying in a way to relieve the situation in my State, which is very grievous, I assure Senators.

If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I regret, feeling as he does as respects these Indians and desiring as he does to promote their civilization, if that civilization can be secured, that now by a point of order he interposes an impediment to the civilization of these four or five hundred Indians who reside in my State and who are under the exclusive guardianship of the Government of the United States. I ask that the latter part of the amendment may be voted on.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to say just one word in reply to the Senator from Iowa. I certainly had no intention of saying anything which would in any way ruffle his feelings, but this amendment ought to have been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no point about that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I certainly never heard of it before. If it had been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs and we had had an opportunity to consider it, it is possible that I might not have made the point of order. But I do think that in the consideration of the appropriation bills it is of the utmost consequence that the rules should be observed. It is of consequence in order that imprudent and improvident and improper appropriations should not be made and that legislation should not creep into appropriation bills; and when an amendment was proposed here of which the committee had never heard, of which I had never heard, I certainly felt it to be my duty to interpose the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 65, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to Push e ten neke que, head chief of the Sac and Fox of Mississippi Indians located in the State of Iowa, $500 per annum during the remainder of his natural life, beginning with and including the fiscal year 1900, in accordance with the terms of Article IV of the treaty proclaimed March 23, 1843.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose that will be paid out of the funds of the tribe, although it does not say so. It says in accordance with the article of the treaty, and the treaty provides that it shall be paid out of the funds of the Indians.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know more about the amendment. It appears that this treaty was made in 1843 and that under its provisions we have been paying the chiefs of this tribe ever since.

Mr. ALLISON. Not all of them.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now we have a new chief, who has been discovered fifty years or more than fifty years after the treaty was made. It seems to me it is rather a dangerous precedent to be putting men upon the rolls in this way with the little information that the Senate has. We might perhaps extend it to a great many other tribes of Indians. If we hunted up all the old treaties, we would find provisions for paying chiefs in almost all of them, and I should like to know more about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In addition to what has been suggested by the Senator from South Dakota, I wish to call attention to the fact that the treaty provides that the $500 shall be paid to the chief out of the annuity paid to the Indians. We have been paying the annuities right along. We have paid all we are under obligation to under the treaty, I presume, and this is a provision that the Treasury of the United States shall proceed to pay it now, when there is nothing in the treaty which says it shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the amendment fairly provides for that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wrote a letter to the Senate stating what was due and that the other chiefs were being paid out of the annuities of the tribes.

Now, this chief has not been paid for the reason that he resides in Iowa. I think that ought not to be a special objection to him, in view of the fact that he has one portion of the tribe with him in our State.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Why has he remained silent for fifty years and not asked for it until now?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests to me, Why did he remain in Iowa? I do not think this chief has remained silent. He has insisted from time to time that this money should be paid, but it has not hitherto been paid. I have insisted several times that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to pay this chief out of the annuities.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And he has refused to do so?

Mr. ALLISON. He has never done so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He certainly had some reason for it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think he may perhaps have had some reason for it, but I can not see what reason he could have, in view of the fourth section of the treaty, which has been twice read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It may be that the Secretary does not believe this man is one of the chiefs included in the treaty. The Senate certainly ought to be informed about the facts in the case before it adopts the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so. Undoubtedly the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has made or will make an investigation of this matter. He has named the principal chief, who I happen to know is the principal chief of these Indians in Iowa. Of course this is not a matter that should occupy the Senate for a great length of time; and inasmuch as Senators desire further information, if they see fit to vote down the amendment, they may do so.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know how this man came to be chief, when he was elected chief, and how he came under the provisions of the treaty of 1843, made fifty-six or fifty-seven years ago. There are a great many chiefs in the State of South Dakota among the Sioux who would like to be put upon the pay roll of the Government, at $500 a year. In fact, I do not suppose there are many people anywhere who would not like to be placed on the pay roll of the Government. There certainly has been nothing stated that justifies our paying out of the funds of these Indians $500 to this particular Indian. It seems to me that question ought to be answered before we put him upon the pay roll.

Mr. THURSTON. In waiving any objection to this amendment, I think it is only fair to say that if it goes upon the bill, I believe the committee of conference ought to consult with the Department of the Interior as to the underlying facts in the matter before passing upon it finally in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I proposed this amendment because it was sent to me from the Indian Office by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has spoken to me several times about the importance of this particular amendment. I assure the Senator that I have no interest in it other than the public good.

Mr. THURSTON. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. ALLISON. And in order to secure what they consider a peaceable disposition of these Indians in Iowa, who complain because this principal chief, who is recognized and known as one of the principal chiefs of the tribe, and who is now, I think, about 78 years of age, does not receive this sum. I am perfectly willing, of course, that this matter shall be thoroughly investigated and that it shall be disagreed to in conference unless it is satisfactory, and I am willing, more than that, if Senators have any doubt as respects the facts which I have stated, that the matter may be rejected now. I do not wish to impose upon this bill an unjust provision. Senators seem to doubt the recommendations of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the suggestions of the Secretary of the Interior. Of course I have no particular desire——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to say for one that I have no doubt of the statements made by the Senator from Iowa. But I do think the Senate has a right to look into and understand the facts of any proposition here to put an Indian or anyone else on the pay rolls of the Government. It seems, according to the contention of the Senator from Iowa, that it has been the duty of the Secretary of the Interior for a great many years to pay this man out of the annuities of these Indians $500 per annum, as he has paid it to other Indians; and the reason why he has not done so the Senator does not know. Now, the recommendation comes from the Interior Department that there shall be a special provision put in the bill here to pay this man $500. If it is to come out of the annuities of these Indians, then the Secretary has full power to act, and I do not see the necessity for the amendment. I have no objection to its going into the bill and going into conference, to be taken up and considered, that all the facts may be understood, but I do not want to be understood as criticising the Senator from Iowa in anything I have said.

There is one thing, in connection with this entire amendment, to which I wish to call attention. I refer to that part of the amendment which has already gone out and which is not now before the Senate. The fact seems to be that Congress appropriated $35,000 to build a schoolhouse for some Indians somewhere in Iowa, and the attendance was 30 pupils a year. I have for a long time been impressed that we were making large appropriations to put up school buildings for Indians in many places where they were not needed; that the vigilance and the activity of gentlemen interested in the localities had brought about very large appropriations to build schoolhouses in a good many places where it would be better not to have built them at all, in my opinion.

Now, having spent $35,000 for building a schoolhouse and being unable to get more than 30 pupils in attendance, seems to me, ought to be a reason why we should hereafter look a little more narrowly into propositions of that kind when they come before the Senate. I am not willing for one, and I hope the time will be far distant in the future when the Senate of the United States will be willing to undertake, contrary to the wishes of the parents, to compel children to attend school simply because we build a schoolhouse, where, probably, it would have been better not to have built one.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that it would be any great offense if we should apply to the Indians exactly the same rule we apply to our own children. We have in the State of Colorado—and I know there are in many other States—what we call a compulsory school system by which the parents are required to send their children to school, or they are subject to a penalty if they do not. That can not be any worse for an Indian than it is for a white man, and it is very much more needed for Indians, as a rule, than for white men.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Is there any provision in the Colorado law which will take a child by force, contrary to the will of the parents, and force him to attend school?

Mr. TELLER. We have never had to do that.

Mr. BERRY. There is no law of that character on the statute book.

Mr. TELLER. No; there is not.

Mr. BERRY. I should think not.

Mr. TELLER. But in a good many countries there is such a law. They take up the vagrant boys and vagrant girls and put them into schools.

Mr. BERRY. Is there any law in any State in the United States that takes the child by force, contrary to the will of the parents, and forces him into school? I have never heard of a case of that kind in the United States.

Mr. TELLER. There are an abundance of cases where they arrest children who are found out of school hours and put them into school.

Mr. SPOONER. If the parent does not do it.

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator from Wisconsin says, if the parent does not do it. I do not suppose we have in Colorado any occasion to do that, because we have sent our children to school.

Mr. THURSTON. Let me make a suggestion in that line. I think there are laws in many States providing for compulsory education, but in regard to the Indians there are two propositions to be considered. One is the possibility of educating them at their own agencies, and the other is of taking them from their parents and sending them to a distance. I know of no law that has ever been proposed in the United States with respect to American children that would take a child away from the home of its parents and send it to school.

Mr. TELLER. I do not understand that there is any proposition of that kind here.

Mr. ALLISON. This school is at the agency.

Mr. TELLER. This school is where the children live. This agency consists of about 2,800 acres of land, and it is small enough so that they can all get to one school if they want to. These Indians belong to the once very famous tribe of Sac and Fox of Mississippi. We made treaties with them very early in the history of Indian affairs in this country, long before anybody here was born. These Indians went to Iowa in 1857, abandoning the home tribe, which was then located in what is now Kansas. They declined to remain in Kansas. They first bought 80 acres of land themselves and established themselves on that small piece of land, and from time to time they have added to it until they now have 2,800 acres of land. They are wild Indians. They are blanket Indians to-day.

I do not care what the Commissioner says about their being able to live without an agent. They live in wigwams and wickiups, and they live just as their ancestors did fifty years ago. They have made practically no progress although living in the midst of civilization. They are somewhat independent. From 1853 to 1867 they never had any annuities or help from the Government at all. They took care of themselves the best way they could. Of course Iowa was a new country then, and I suppose there were some opportunities, in the way of hunting, etc., that are denied to them now. But if any people in the United States need an agent more than any other tribe it is this tribe.

The committee complain because we are unwilling to accept their suggestion, which they admit they got from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, without any examination whatever into the facts. I do not desire to do anything that is offensive to the committee. This is a very excellent bill, in my judgment. I approve of everything in it except these things, I believe; but I think we all of us who have been giving some attention to the Indian question, and know something about these matters, are entitled, if we choose to differ with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to differ with him. I do not think the Commissioner needs to find fault, and I do not think the committee need to find fault.

It seems to me there has been a little feeling or irritation because we do not agree that these three agents should be dispensed with. The Senator from South Dakota who represents one of the agencies, it being within his State, stated that it was necessary to keep the agent there. You can not read the report of the agent in either of these two cases without admitting and being compelled to admit that there is an absolute necessity and there will be for years to come for an agent, unless you are to abandon the agent system entirely. It is not enough to say you will turn it over to the superintendent of schools. He is an entirely different officer, with different duties; and the agent should be selected from a different class from those who preside over the schools. He should be an executive man. It is not necessary that he should be a scholarly man always. He should be an honest man and of executive ability and with some tact.

The agent is needed. I will not take the time to read the report of that agent, which is here on our tables, which shows that these people need the fostering and kindly care of the Government, and are likely to for many years to come. I think they need a compulsory school law myself, although I would not be in favor of taking the children and carrying them off to a distant place. But I would provide a school in their neighborhood, and I would compel parents to send their children there. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. I of course knew that in a number of States of the Union compulsory education is required—that is, if parents fail to send their children to school, a penalty attaches. But I do not think any law has ever been passed in this country which goes to the extent of the amendment offered, which says:

> That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to place in said school established for their benefit such children of the Sac and Fox tribe of Indians in Iowa, without the consent of parents or other persons, as in his discretion should be compelled to attend school.

I think such a provision would be oppressive and tyrannical, and could not be justified or excused by any State or by the National Government. The idea that this Commissioner in his discretion, and his only, shall go to a man's house and contrary to his will take his child and force him off into school! I am glad that it went out upon the point of order, and I hope no such proposition will ever pass the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. There are two things that I have listened to in this discussion which have impressed me. One is the fact that we have Indian children, a hundred and fifty or more years since we have been endeavoring to educate and civilize them, who are still wild barbarians, apparently without much hope of ever making them useful citizens. If such is the fact, it seems to me we ought to throw around them every possible safeguard that we can by legislation, and if an Indian agent will help out these children, unquestionably an Indian agent ought to be provided for.

Mr. THURSTON. Perhaps I ought to state to the Senator that we have already passed the amendment restoring the agency.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that.

Mr. THURSTON. And we have also ruled out, on a point of order, the amendment as to compulsory education.

Mr. GALLINGER. That being the case, I am going to speak to something that the Senate, I think, unwisely did.

I am very strongly of the opinion, Mr. President, that in treating with Indian tribes and undertaking to educate and Christianize Indian children we ought to have compulsory education in every State of the American Union where there are Indian children. I come from a State which has a compulsory education law. We have in the little city in which I happen to live a truant officer, whose duty it is to ascertain what children of school age do not go to our public schools. I am not sure of the extent to which his power goes, or as to whether or not those children can be forcibly placed in school, but I know that the parents can be held to very strict accountability if they do not see that their children attend the public schools. That being found necessary for the State of New Hampshire, I think it is infinitely more necessary for these barbarian children who are on our Western plains, and who have not seemed to be impressed by education or Christianity during the last couple hundred years.

I am sorry I was absent from the Chamber when the amendment went out on a point of order, and I am extremely sorry it was obnoxious to the rule. I wish it might have been put upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. We passed over page 48 of the bill for further amendment. I propose to amend the amendment by adding what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment to the amendment on page 48 of the bill, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "ninety-seven," on page 48, line 15, it is proposed to insert:

Such payment to be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles and paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask what rate of interest is being paid under this amendment and for how long a period.

Mr. THURSTON. There is no interest to be paid under this section. The use of the term interest is simply to cover the purposes for which the award is made. The treaty with the Indians provided that their certain claims should be determined by the Senate of the United States. At a previous session of Congress the committee had the claim under consideration, which amounted to very much more than the award made in this bill. The committee took under consideration the question of the claim and interest thereon, and we reached a conclusion to allow the sum herein stated, a hundred and eighty-six thousand dollars, in full payment for the claims and interest thereon, being but about half, I believe, of what the total amount of the claims and interest thereon would have amounted to—about 45 per cent.

The action of the committee was ratified by the Senate in passing a bill to pay the amount; and at this session of Congress in committee we felt constrained to hold that the action of the Senate heretofore taken was a determination of the award and a fixing of the amount under the terms of the treaty. We have therefore included an appropriation in full for payment of these claims and interest in the amount named in the section.

Mr. ALLISON. That is to say, the whole amount is in execution of a decision of the Senate.

Mr. THURSTON. Of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. As respects the amount due under the treaty.

Mr. THURSTON. Under the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 7, after the word "physician," it is proposed to insert "and two clerks;" so as to read:

For support and civilization of Nez Perce Indians in Idaho, including pay of physician and two clerks, $1,000.

Mr. THURSTON. I should like to hear the Senator from Idaho upon that point. I do not recall that this proposed amendment has been submitted to the committee or passed upon.

Mr. SHOUP. I will say to the Senator that it was presented to the committee in the House and overlooked.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Senator from Idaho proceeds, let me call attention to the fact that an amendment was put on the bill on page 4 providing for a new agency. We seem to have made a new agency—the Nez Perce Agency, $1,600. This is an addition to the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. SHOUP. I will state for the information of the Senator that this agency has been in existence for a great many years. It is a large agency, and the House left out this item. The estimate was made by the Interior Department for the payment of an agent, and for some reason or other this item was left out in the House. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs concurred in the view as to the importance of the agency. An appropriation of $1,000 was inserted heretofore. This provides for two clerks. The agents have clerks, and in reinstating the agency it is necessary that the agent shall have clerks.

Mr. KYLE. What provision is made for the payment of these clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Idaho proposes to make no addition to the appropriation.

Mr. SHOUP. To pay a physician and two clerks, $2,800. That is the way the amendment reads.

Mr. THURSTON. It does not seem to me that the amendment is at all necessary. Clerks are provided for these agencies under the general appropriation. We do not provide in any of our bills the legislation for clerks at the agencies. It seems to me that the Senator will have the clerks at that agency without any provision of this kind.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the clerks are there now the general appropriation for employees of the Department covers this item. There is no doubt the Department will continue the clerks if they are there now. If it is a provision for two new clerks, however, then it presents another question.

Mr. THURSTON. I have no particular objection to the amendment, if the Senator thinks it is necessary.

Mr. SHOUP. I have doubt as to its being covered under any other clause in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will ask the Senator to state whether the clerks are there now at that agency.

Mr. SHOUP. I can not state with certainty. I know that one is there now, and I think both. That is my judgment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think there ought not to be any change of the law, because if the agency has been in existence for years and the force has been sufficient to transact the business there certainly ought to be some reason shown here why there should be an increase in the force. The general appropriation for employees in the Department provides for carrying on all the force which is now employed in the Indian service everywhere.

Mr. SHOUP. One reason why we need two clerks is because we have a mill there, and the agent will certainly select a man who is a miller as well as a useful person as a clerk. Those clerks are needed all the time. The Government owns a flouring mill there, and there is no provision for the payment.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I will state that the Secretary of the Interior can select a miller and a clerk if he chooses, if he has money enough to pay him from the general appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He has a general fund for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. He can do it if he has money enough. It is only a question how much money he has. He has the power to select a clerk and a miller, and all that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think we have a provision in this bill for the employment of a clerk of an Indian agent.

Mr. THURSTON. We have no such provision at all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not one.

Mr. THURSTON. The Idaho Agency will be left the same as all the others.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think you will need the provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendments will be read. The Secretary omitted to state the increased amount.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 7, after the word "physician" strike out "$1,000" and insert "and 2 clerks, $2,800," so that the paragraph, if amended, would read:

For support and civilization of the Nez Perce Indians in Idaho, including pay of physician and 2 clerks, $2,800.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice of two amendments that I would propose. I heard the chairman say that he was instructed by the committee not to allow anything savoring of legislation to go on the bill. I have two amendments of considerable importance, in which some people in my State are particularly interested. They are both practically the same thing, proposing to amend the act of 1880, so as to insert the name of Mrs. Sarah R. Dresser in the place of George Dresser, and to insert the name of Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker in the place of her daughter, Miss Josephine Meeker. I am clearly of the opinion that it is legislation, and therefore I do not offer the amendments. I have a bill pending of the same kind, and I shall have to rely upon the passage of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are one or two amendments which have been passed over. The Chair would suggest that there is one on page 42, and another on page 71.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator from Arkansas has an amendment which he desires to submit to the amendment on page 42.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am ready to present it now if there is no objection. I move to strike out, in line 2, on page 42, after the word "final" down to the end of the paragraph, in line 5. The words I propose to strike out are the following:

But this shall not in any manner affect the provisions of the act of Congress of June 28, 1898, respecting the Mississippi Choctaws.

The foregoing provision is one regulating the question of the enrollment of the Choctaws. This provision was put into the bill with the understanding that it would save the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws in the Choctaw Nation under the law as it now stands. Further consideration has satisfied the people in interest that it does not do so, and they want the language I now propose substituted for the language which I propose to strike out and to insert the following:

Provided,—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where does that come in?

Mr. THURSTON. After the word "final," line 2, page 42.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "final." I move to strike out all after the word "final," in line 2, on page 42, and insert another form of amendment which I send to the desk, and which I believe more clearly carries out the purpose of this amendment than the language in the bill. The Secretary has the amendment. I sent it up. I have another copy, and I shall read it.

Mr. THURSTON. I suggest that should be after the amendment already made. We inserted a few words after the word "final."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not remember that.

Mr. THURSTON. We inserted, "when approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is correct. Let my amendment come in after those words.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not want to be technical, Mr. President, and if the Senator in charge of this bill wishes to go along in this way I certainly shall not object, but I call attention to the rule that an amendment having been adopted as in Committee of the Whole it is not amendable until it reaches the Senate. Still, if the chairman cares to have the amendment further amended now, I shall not object.

Mr. THURSTON. I will say that the Senator from New Hampshire was not here when the bill was taken up. It was the understanding, in which I concurred, that amendments might be offered either as in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate, notwithstanding that we had acted upon the bill as we went along.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I yield to that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In addition to that, when this amendment was up at the time the other was adopted, I offered this amendment to it, and by unanimous consent it was passed over until the committee amendments were disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment inserted after the word "final," line 2, page 42, insert the following proviso:

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is an amendment that comes after the word "final" and this proviso comes after that amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That any Mississippi Choctaw duly identified and enrolled as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall have the right, at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the Secretary of the Interior, to make settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and on proof of the fact of bona fide settlement they shall be enrolled by the said United States Commission and by the Secretary of the Interior as Choctaws entitled to allotment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso which has just been read is proposed to be inserted after the words "the Interior" instead of the word "final."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not wish to make any point about this amendment, but I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that this is legislation, making Choctaws of people who are not now Choctaws.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is legislation pure and simple.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, this whole section is a provision for the enrollment of these Indians. The present Dawes Commission has already enrolled all of the Mississippi Choctaws. The provision is that in making the enrollment of the balance of the Choctaws so many of the Mississippi Choctaws as shall in good faith move to the Choctaw country before the final settlement under the laws, as they exist now, shall be enrolled as Choctaws; and so far from being any violation of the rules in any sense it is in exact compliance with what the bill is doing.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this is legislation amending legislation. Through the persuasion of the Indian Affairs Committee a year or two ago we put some legislation upon the Indian appropriation bill at that time authorizing the enumeration of the Choctaws in Mississippi, without in any sense providing for their status when enumerated.

It is well known that these Choctaws have a large estate which is either a tribal estate or at some time, if the tribe is abolished, will become the individual estate of the Choctaws in the Indian Territory. The Choctaws who have lived in Mississippi, by no law that I know of, are now entitled to become part owners and holders of that tribal estate, either individually or collectively.

If I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, it is an amendment to allow people who are Choctaws, or of the Choctaw tribe, to remove from Mississippi now, and it authorizes this commission, after they have moved there, to enroll them as though they had always lived there under the treaty, and thus entitle them to a participation in this tribal estate.

I may be mistaken as to the purport and effect of this amendment, but if that is not the purport and effect of it, why is it that the Senator proposes now to put upon the roll of the tribes in the Indian Territory Choctaws who have not been there for the last fifty years, or thirty years, and who have now no right to participate in the property of the Choctaw tribe of Indians?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has been so much absorbed in great political questions which necessarily come before him for consideration in the Committee on Appropriations that many little things have escaped him, among others the facts relating to the Mississippi Choctaws.

This section which I propose to amend is a provision directing how the Dawes Commission shall enroll the Choctaws. Under the Choctaw law as it stands now any Mississippi Choctaw who removes from Mississippi to the Choctaw country may become a citizen of the Choctaw tribe. He has that right now under the law.

It was suggested that when this bill was passed all Indians who were not enrolled would be barred. The question was, if the Mississippi Choctaws under the law should between now and the completion of this work go to the Territory, would they be barred from their rights under the Choctaw law? and this amendment is simply to save their rights in case they go. It is simply to prevent the section as we have framed it from cutting out the Mississippi Choctaws from the right they would otherwise have.

The language which I propose to strike out was put in by the committee because it was understood by the committee to save the rights of the Choctaws. I understand that the persons in interest believe that there was some doubt about whether the language proposed by the committee would save the rights of these Mississippi Choctaws, and in the form in which I have put it there is no doubt but that it will reserve their rights. That is all there is of it. There is no legislation in it except the limitation on what the Dawes Commission is to do in the expenditure of the money that we appropriate, and it is in no sense amenable to any criticism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I believe the Senator from Arkansas has an amendment which he desires to present in lieu of the proviso on the same page about town-site appraisers.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I am going to propose that amendment now. I move, on page 42, to strike out all after the word "be," in line 16, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas presents an amendment which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "be," in line 16, page 42, down to the word "Secretary," in line 8, page 43, and to insert:

A commission for each town in said Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Cherokee nations, to consist of one member to be appointed by the executive of such nation, who shall not be interested in town property other than his home, one member to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior; and if the executive of the nation fails to select members as aforesaid, he may be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. The agreement of any two members of said commission as to the market value of any lot shall constitute a determination thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and if no two of said members are able to agree the matter in dispute shall then be determined by such Secretary: Provided, further, That the council of any city or town in either of said nations may, in its discretion, and at the expense of such city or town, proceed itself to cause such city or town to be surveyed and platted as contemplated in said sections 15 and 29 of said act approved June 28, 1898, entitled "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," and file the plat thereof as therein directed, which shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

As soon as the survey and plat of any town is approved the commission for such town shall, with all proper dispatch, proceed to make the appraisements of the lots and the improvements thereon in manner as provided and prescribed in said sections 15 and 29 of said act approved June 28, 1898, and file their report with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, further, That if, at the expiration of six months from the approval of this act, being the time allowed for the city or town council to exercise the option to survey and plat, any town has not been surveyed and platted as herein provided, the authority of the town or city council to survey and plat the same shall then cease, and the powers in relation thereto shall devolve upon the commission for such town, who shall cause the same to be surveyed and platted, and make their report thereon, as well as the report of the appraisement thereof, through the United States Indian inspector for the Indian Territory, to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. The commissioners for unincorporated towns shall proceed with due diligence to survey, plat, and appraise such towns, and make their reports thereon as herein contemplated.

All towns and villages which at the approval of this act, or that may, prior to the allotment of the land on which the same may be situated, have a population of 100 or more, shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute a town.

That the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes is hereby authorized, upon application by any interested parties, to set aside and reserve from allotments to individual citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes any lands in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, or Cherokee nations, in the Indian Territory, not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, at such points as may be found necessary and desirable for town-site purposes, on the line of any railroad which shall be constructed in the Indian Territory prior to allotment. Such town sites shall be selected, surveyed, and platted, and lots disposed of for the benefit of the tribe, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

It shall be unlawful for any person to sell or attempt to sell occupancy rights to lots in any town of said nations which may be reserved from allotment under the provisions of this act, or to settle or attempt to settle any lands as towns until the same shall have been set apart for town-site purposes as hereinbefore provided, or as otherwise expressly provided by law.

Nothing in the said act of June 28, 1898, or in this act, shall be held to require that town-site limits established in the course of laying out and disposing of town lots and the corporate limits of towns, if incorporated, shall be coextensive, and such town-site limits and corporate limits, respectively, shall be so established as to best subserve the then present needs and the reasonable prospective growth as the same may appear at the times when such limits are respectively established.

In the disposition of unimproved lots under the town-site laws in said

Territory the cash payment of 25 per cent of the purchase price shall be required in all instances at the time of sale, and the balance shall be required to be paid in equal annual installments.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, this amendment, and perhaps one or two others that will be proposed, may lead to some discussion. I feel that we have made good progress with this bill. I was about to suggest that if there was no other business of importance before the Senate I would move to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that motion is put, I desire to reserve the right to make the point of order on the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator yields to me before making his motion, I understood him to say.

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

MARIE J. BLAISDELL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 3075) granting an increase of pension to Marie J. Blaisdell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "nurse," to insert "Medical Department, United States Volunteers;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marie J. Blaisdell, late army nurse, Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to the Indian appropriation bill, and ask that it may be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the proposed amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, line 23, strike out all of line 23 after the word "hereby," and all of lines 24 and 25, and insert:

Granted the right to a patent to the land so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fees, and no other or further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required from such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry.

All sums due any Indian tribe shall be paid by the United States.

That if the funds derived from the sale of public lands shall not be sufficient to meet the payments heretofore provided by an act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, for the more complete endowment and support of the college for the benefit of agriculture and mechanical arts as per act of Congress of July 2, 1862, such deficiencies shall be paid by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present an amendment intended to be offered to the Indian appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, ordered to be printed, and lie upon the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. THURSTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 7, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 6, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. H. N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT FOR HAWAII.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 222, to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair, for the further consideration of the bill S. 222.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 222.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of section 80, lines 13, 14, and 15, beginning with the word "except," in line 13, and ending with the word "only," in line 15.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That section has been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of the proposed amendment by the gentleman from Arkansas could not be heard at the desk.

Mr. McRAE. It is to strike out, in lines 13, 14, and 15, on page 85, of section 80, beginning with the word "except," in line 13, and ending with the word "only," in line 15.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That section has been defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that section has been stricken out of the bill by an amendment heretofore adopted.

Mr. McRAE. The whole section?

Mr. SHAFROTH. All except the last paragraph, and in lieu thereof the Senate section has been adopted.

Mr. KNOX. That was done last night.

Mr. McRAE. Did the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado cover all of the section?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It took in all of section 80 down to the eighth line of page 86, and in lieu thereof it inserted the Senate section.

Mr. McRAE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, before the word "all" in the eighth line of page 86, the following: "All officers appointed under the provisions of this section shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment follows the amendment made last evening on motion of the gentleman from Colorado for the appointment of certain officers, and provides in effect that the judges of the supreme court, the circuit courts, the attorney-general, the treasurer, the commissioner of public lands, the superintendent of agriculture, the superintendent of public works, the superintendent of public construction, auditor, deputy auditor, surveyor, high sheriff, members of the board of health, commissioner of public instruction, board of prison inspectors, board of registration, inspectors of election, and other boards shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does it provide that the circuit-court judges shall be citizens of Hawaii?

Mr. MONDELL. It does. It provides that all the officers mentioned in the amendment adopted yesterday afternoon shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the committee has no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

All persons holding office in the Hawaiian Islands at the time this act takes effect shall, except as herein otherwise provided, continue to hold their respective offices until such offices become vacant, but not beyond the end of the first session of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii unless reappointed as herein provided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, on page 86, and insert: "All persons holding office in the Hawaiian Islands at the time that this act takes effect shall continue to hold their respective offices until their successors are appointed and qualified, but not beyond the end of the first session of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii unless reappointed as hereinafter provided."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The only purpose of the amendment is to provide that the officers shall hold until the expiration of the first term of the senate, and, as I think, is in better language and less open to misinterpretation than the language of the bill.

Mr. KNOX. I think that is already covered by the language of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the chairman of the committee will see that the language used in the section might be open to some misinterpretation, and it is only to prevent that that this amendment is proposed. It has been submitted to the members of the committee on the other side and is satisfactory to them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 80 by adding:

"It shall be the duty of the surveyor to report annually to the Department of Labor and to the governor of Hawaii and legislature, the area in acres of all holdings not less than 100 acres in extent, whether by grant, lease, or otherwise, of agricultural land in Hawaii; by whom owned or held, the character of the cultivation, the number of laborers employed on each holding, the nationality of the laborers, the daily, weekly or monthly wages paid, and such other information as the Department of Labor may prescribe. And it shall be his duty to call on all such holders of agricultural lands for such written statements as may be prescribed by the Department of Labor. Any failure to make such a statement by any person or corporation shall subject such person or corporation to a penalty of $100 for each and every refusal; to be collected and enforced by the government of the Territory of Hawaii in the courts of Hawaii."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to obtain statistical information relating to the agricultural lands in Hawaii and the labor employed upon those lands. The population of those islands consists of 60,000 Asiatics, 40,000 Kanakas, 15,000 Portuguese, and about 8,000 other whites. We can readily understand that if the entire legislation of those islands drifts into the hands of the landed class, we shall have there a republic in name only.

I take it, the purpose and aim of our legislation is to increase the immigration of free white persons to those islands; and our duty is to obtain such statistical information upon this subject as will enable us to legislate upon it intelligently hereafter. At present the labor there is mainly the labor of Asiatics. There is no reason why white labor should not be employed in those islands. The Portuguese and the Italians are excellent laborers in a climate of that kind.

We have had a large experience with both these classes of laborers upon the Pacific coast, and we have found them exceedingly efficient. Most of these people who come to this country are poorly educated, but their children under our free-school system acquire an education and become intelligent citizens, exercising the duties of citizenship consistently with the spirit of our institutions. Now, it seems to me that if we can encourage that kind of immigration and discourage Asiatic immigration, we shall march a long ways in the line of making the Hawaiian government a republic in spirit and essence as well as in form.

Of course we do not want to interfere with vested rights there. Nor do we wish to interfere ignorantly with the conduct of business there. But the purpose of this amendment is to secure this statistical information which will enable the legislature of Hawaii to act, and if it does not act wisely, will enable Congress itself to act on this subject.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Allow me to say to my friend from Nevada that if I correctly caught the reading of this amendment, I do not think that under it the government of Hawaii would be enabled to collect the penalty prescribed. Unless we shall more definitely define the violation of law and prescribe the mode of collecting the penalty, I think the surveyor might ignore this provision and there could be no recourse to the courts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The amendment provides that the Department of Labor shall prescribe the form of statement required from those holding agricultural lands; and it is made the duty of the surveyor to exact such a statement; and any failure or refusal on the part of a holder of agricultural lands to make such a statement subjects him to a penalty of $100, to be collected in the courts of Hawaii by the government of Hawaii.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. In my humble opinion, in order to enforce the penalty you must make it a misdemeanor or a crime to refuse to furnish this information. To say simply that a failure to return the prescribed statement shall subject the person failing to a certain penalty is so indefinite that no court would support a declaration founded upon such a provision. You must specifically define as an offense the act which the law undertakes to make punishable.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I shall be very glad to accept any amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] may frame in order to make this provision more efficient. All I want is to have some provision of this kind incorporated in the bill. I have no doubt that the committee of conference, if we give them a basis of action, will shape the provision properly. Of course our amendments hastily offered here are sometimes quite crude.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to say that if I have understood correctly this amendment and its purpose, it is in the direction of securing very valuable and necessary information; and I think I may say on behalf of the committee that we have no objection whatever to its being adopted.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will allow me to say that the machinery of the government now in operation in Hawaii provides for the accomplishment of the very purpose which he aims at. Anyone who cares to examine into the matter will find a synopsis of such statistics in the report of the commission and a supplemental report. But this provision will do no harm.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I understand, it can do no harm; and in addition we shall have under its terms a report to the Department of Labor, which would be published, so that Congress will have such information to guide its action.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS, it was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER IV.

THE JUDICIARY.

SEC. 81. That the judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish. And until the legislature shall otherwise provide, the laws of Hawaii heretofore in force concerning the several courts and their jurisdiction and procedure shall continue in force except as herein otherwise provided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. KNOX] to the first section, which provides that the judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in a supreme court, but there is a failure to mention the five circuit courts, which are the present establishment, and the language which follows is not sufficiently clear. If the gentleman concurs with me, I will send to the desk an amendment to insert the words "and five circuit courts."

Mr. KNOX. The general provision of law puts the Territorial judicial power into one supreme court and such inferior courts as shall be established by the legislature of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But I do not suppose the circuit courts would be styled inferior courts.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes; they have not final jurisdiction. Those courts will be established by the legislature of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not understand that a circuit court which has general jurisdiction is an inferior court under the decisions.

Mr. KNOX. This is not a United States circuit court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. KNOX. We allow the establishment of circuit courts when we say "inferior courts."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is thought by some that the paragraph should read:

That the judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in one supreme court and five circuit courts.

With the gentleman's consent, I will send the amendment up.

Mr. KNOX. We would not like to put the judicial power of the Territory into the hands of the circuit courts. The judicial power is put into the hands of the supreme court, and then the legislature will have the power to establish inferior courts. I think this is the language which is used with reference to every Territory.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But there are now five circuit courts.

Mr. KNOX. It is expected we shall have to have more than five within the present year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Do you say that there is a desire to increase the number?

Mr. KNOX. It will be necessary, probably. That is the general impression.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The fear is that they will reduce the number.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then upon the statement of the gentleman I will not offer the amendment.

Mr. BELL. I wish to suggest to the committee that we strike out the word "inferior." The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] in giving the distinction between superior and inferior courts has the correct idea.

There is a long line of decisions to the effect that no court of general jurisdiction can be said to be inferior, and they make the distinction between a court of limited jurisdiction and a court of general jurisdiction.

Mr. KNOX. There is no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. BELL. I move to strike out the word "inferior."

Mr. KNOX. There is no objection to that.

Mr. LANE. Substitute the word "other."

Mr. KNOX. Yes; strike out the word "inferior" and substitute "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 81, line 16, strike out the word "inferior" and substitute the word "other."

Mr. BRICK. I would like to be heard upon that. If you say, "such other courts," that would give the power in the legislature to provide for other appellate courts. It might provide for that and might be so construed. It is not the intention that the legislature shall provide for any other appellate court than a supreme court; so that if you strike out the distinctive qualification of inferior courts, then it should read "such other circuit courts and inferior courts" as the legislature may establish.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman that the words "circuit courts" ought to be in there. Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. BRICK. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I hope the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] will so frame his amendment.

Mr. BRICK. That will obviate the difficulty.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I trust the gentleman from Colorado will so frame his amendment as to cover that proposition.

Mr. BELL. I have no objection. My only object was to remove a word that was subject to misconstruction.

Mr. DENNY. Why not say "such other circuit courts?"

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Substitute "other circuit courts and such inferior courts."

Mr. BELL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to withdraw the amendment, and the gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "such," in line 17, insert the words "other circuit courts and."

So that it will read:

That the judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in one supreme court and in such other circuit courts and inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT.

SEC. 82. That the supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, who shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii and shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and may be removed by the President: Provided, however, That in case of the disqualification or absence of any justice thereof, in any cause pending before the court, on the trial and determination of said cause his place shall be filled as provided by law.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 36, section 82, line 25, after the word "and," insert the words "not less than."

Mr. KNOX. This section provides for a supreme court, to consist of a chief justice and two associate justices. The purpose is that there shall not be less than two associate justices.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORLISS. I should like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the measure whether there is any limitation of the terms of the judges of that court?

Mr. LANE. That is fixed in section 80 by an amendment which was offered yesterday, fixing the term for four years.

Mr. CORLISS. The length of the judicial term is limited to four years?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISQUALIFICATION BY RELATIONSHIP, PECUNIARY INTEREST, OR PREVIOUS JUDGMENT.

SEC. 84. That no person shall sit as a judge or juror in any case in which his relative by affinity or by consanguinity within the third degree is interested, either as a plaintiff or defendant, or in the issue of which the said judge or juror may have, either directly or through such relative, any pecuniary interest.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, section 84, line 21, add the following after the word "interest:" "No judge shall sit on an appeal or new trial in any case in which he may have given a previous judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the next section to be read, providing for impeachments. In view of the fact that the House by a pronounced vote has provided that the President shall appoint the judges, I will ask the gentleman to give his attention to that paragraph, and will ask whether it should not be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPEACHMENT.

SEC. 85. That the judges of the circuit court of the Territory shall be liable to removal from office on impeachment by the house of representatives upon any of the following grounds, namely: Any act or negligence involving moral turpitude punishable by law as an offense and committed while in office, incapacity for the due performance of official duty, or maladministration in office.

The senate shall be a court with full and sole authority to hear and determine all impeachments made by the house of representatives.

The chief justice of the supreme court shall be ex officio president of the senate in all cases of impeachment.

Previous to the trial of any impeachment the senators shall, respectively, be sworn truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question according to law and the evidence.

The judgment of the senate, in case of the conviction of the person impeached, shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold any place of honor, trust, or profit under the government; but the person so convicted shall be, nevertheless, liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

Mr. KNOX. I think, as the circuit judges are to be appointed by the President, that they should not be subject to impeachment by the local legislature. I agree with what the gentleman says, and I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 85.

Mr. COX. I should like to call my friend's attention to the fact that we may be acting too hastily. We have conferred on the President the power to appoint the judges and the power to remove; but suppose a judge is guilty of misconduct and the President neither removes him nor takes any action in the case. I think he ought to be impeached.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would very much sooner trust it to the President than to the Territorial organization of the legislature; and it would not do to bring them into conflict upon that line.

Mr. COX. That is all right, if you want to take it out; but you will have a judge, if he runs with the President, that is in for all time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This was provided so the appointment could not be made by the governor of the Territory, and it would be a check.

Mr. KNOX. I can not hear a word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BELL. I want to ask the chairman of the committee how you get rid of the circuit judge?

Mr. KNOX. He is appointed by the governor.

Mr. BELL. He is appointed by the President; not the district judge.

Mr. KNOX. You mean the United States district judge. We have not come to that.

Mr. BELL. This is the judge of the Territory. After the governor makes the appointment, can he withdraw him?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The circuit judges are not appointed by the President.

Mr. BELL. How can you get rid of them?

Mr. KNOX. The President can remove them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It would not do to bring in conflict the legislature and the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DELEGATE TO CONGRESS.

SEC. 86. That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve during each Congress, shall be elected by the voters qualified to vote for members of the house of representatives of the legislature; such Delegate shall possess the qualifications necessary for membership of the house of representatives of the legislature of Hawaii. The times, places, and manner of holding elections shall be as fixed by law. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be declared by the governor duly elected, and a certificate shall be given accordingly. Every such Delegate shall have a seat in the House of Representatives, with the right of debate, but not of voting.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 89, from and including line 20 to and including line 9, on page 90, and insert the following:

"TERRITORIAL COMMISSIONER.

"In lieu of a Territorial Delegate, the governor may nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the said Territory of Hawaii, appoint a commissioner of said Territory, to reside at the capital of the United States, and to represent the interests of said Territory of Hawaii in its relations with the United States. Said commissioner shall, when appointed, be a citizen and bona fide resident of said Territory; his term of office shall be two years; his salary shall be $5,000 per annum, which, with his actual, necessary traveling expenses in coming from said Territory and returning thereto, shall be paid by the United States."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the annexation of Hawaii. During that discussion a very remarkable speech was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] upon the annexation of Hawaii. I want to read a portion of that speech:

If we annex Hawaii and you, Mr. Speaker, should preside here twenty years hence, it may be that you will have a polyglot House, and it will be your painful duty to recognize "the gentleman from Patagonia," "the gentleman from Cuba," "the gentleman from Santo Domingo," "the gentleman from Korea," "the gentleman from Hongkong."

And so on. I will not quote further from that remarkable speech, but the quotation which I have now read, when it was uttered, was received with loud laughter and derision in this House; but it seems to me that the presentation of this bill, for a Delegate from a Territory with the small population of Hawaii, has made that speech partially fulfilled prophecy. Now, I object to a Delegate from the Hawaiian Islands to the Congress of the United States. I object to it because since the adjournment of the last session of Congress on the 4th of March, after the most careful and intelligent inquiry, I have failed to find a citizen of the United States who believes in a political union with any of these insular possessions, with the right of representation in the American Congress at this time. Therefore I move to strike it out; and I want to call the attention of the House to the successive steps that have been taken which have brought us to this position.

It was not intended or expected by the Hawaiian people when annexation was asked for with the United States that it was to be a Territory of the United States; and when the measure was presented by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, standing in the aisle near where he is now sitting, he made a most excellent address upon that subject; but he was asked by a gentleman on the other side of the House, "What form of government do you think will be recommended for the Hawaiian Islands?" And the gentleman made this reply: "I am not prepared to answer that question; but in my judgment"—I am not giving the exact language, but the substance—"it should be made a county of the State of California or Oregon." It was with such understanding and with such expectation that I voted for the annexation of Hawaii. To-day a bill comes in here for a full-fledged Territory, asking for a right of representation by a Delegate in the American Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL. I have but five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HILL. Now, I claim the people of Hawaii themselves did not expect, neither do they now, neither did they want nor do they want now, practically universal suffrage.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman where he got his information that they do not desire it?

Mr. HILL. The Hawaiian republic was organized as a protest against Kanaka rule. I have the facts here before me.

Mr. MONDELL. What has that to do with this?

Mr. HILL. It was as a protest against Kanaka rule that Liliuokalani was deposed from the throne, and in order to control the Territory those who were looked upon as citizens of Hawaii at that time were compelled to enforce a restricted suffrage. They did it. I am not in favor of the property qualification under which that was done; but I am in favor of stopping Kanaka control over these islands, and opposed to voting to give a Kanaka representative a seat in the House of Representatives or a Kanaka representation in the House of Representatives of the American Congress.

Now, I have said they were not in favor of it themselves. Their own action is the best comment on this bill. Their manner of controlling this was by making a property qualification. The report of the Committee on Territories in the Fifty-fifth Congress says:

The amendment recommended in section 34, which prescribes the qualifications of members of the senate, strikes out the property qualification therein provided and makes the qualification that of an elector for members of the senate, which, by section 62, is the ownership of real estate of the value of $1,000 or the receipt of an income of $600 for the year preceding registration. This requirement of property ownership is somewhat less than that of the constitution of the republic of Hawaii, which, by article 76, is made the ownership of real estate, above incumbrances, of the value of $1,500, or of personal property of the value of $3,000 above incumbrances, or the receipt of a money income of $600 for the year preceding registration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks that the time of the gentleman from Connecticut be extended for ten minutes? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. HILL. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe in taxation without representation?

Mr. HILL. There are 100,000 people in the Hawaiian Islands; there are 300,000 in the District of Columbia that are taxed without representation. There are 100,000 in the Territory of Alaska to-day that are taxed without representation.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But does the gentleman believe in that principle?

Mr. HILL. I believe the best government on earth to-day is that of the city of Washington in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But does the gentleman believe in the principle of taxation without representation?

Mr. DRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL. I have but ten minutes. The people of Hawaii do not ask for this. They ask for a restricted suffrage and wish to be controlled and governed by the educated and intelligent portion of the people of the islands of Hawaii.

The report further says:

The question of a property qualification of any kind for a voter or member of the senate is an important one and is calculated to excite antagonism in the United States, but such a qualification has long prevailed in Hawaii, and, as far as can be ascertained, meets the approval of the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what else did we do? After annexing Hawaii we sent an able and distinguished commission to those islands. They went there and examined the conditions, a commission of which the gentleman the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was a member, and came back and reported in favor of this restricted suffrage, by which the Caucasian race should have and continue in the unrestricted control of those islands. This committee has utterly ignored the recommendation of that commission which we sent to investigate the matter. That is not all; that restriction was so severe that out of 14,000 eligible voters, under the terms of this bill, the republic of Hawaii itself only allowed 2,800 to be registered—less than one-quarter—and it was absolutely necessary that they should do it, or else the Kanaka control would sweep them out of the island. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not all.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I can not now; perhaps I will later. Not only did the commission report in favor of this, but this very committee which now brings in this bill brought in a bill last year in favor of a restricted representation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And with a property qualification.

Mr. HILL. Yes; with a property qualification; but that is a matter of no importance, because it was not put there for the purpose of a property qualification, but as the best method of preventing the Kanaka control of these islands. It was put there because there was a population there which the gentleman himself [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] likened to the tribes of Africa yesterday, which was unjust, when the question was up on the saloon amendment. It was this Kanaka control that they desired to prevent. Not only did the committees of both Houses last year make this recommendation, but the chairman of that commission, representing the chairman of the committee in the Senate, this year brought in a similar bill, and it was only for the first time since this question has been considered that this committee now brings in a bill sweeping away all restrictions and admitting to suffrage everyone in these islands who can read.

Now, what is the nationality of these people? I want to give it to you. There is a total population of 109,000, according to the census of 1896. There are of voters about 3,000 Americans, Germans, French, and English; about 3,000 Portuguese, and, according to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, there are 9,000 Kanaka votes, so that according to his own statement on the question of elections the American, German, French, and English voters will be simply buried under a vote of 4 to 1.

The amendment I have offered proposes a commissioner appointed by the governor of the islands, who himself is appointed by the President of the United States, and makes a business proposition of what this bill, as it now stands, makes a political proposition, and it is the political feature of it that I object to.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the people of the United States are yet ready to take the first step toward statehood for these insular possessions. It may be said that it makes no difference in this respect whether this man is elected by the people of Hawaii or whether he is appointed by the appointee of the President of the United States. The sentiment is there that if you make the islands of Hawaii a full-fledged Territory, but one more step, and that a short one, is necessary to be taken under the political exigencies that might arise with either party, Republican or Democratic, that would thereby get control and help to maintain control of the United States Senate, if this island and Puerto Rico should be swept in as States in the Union. I for one am utterly opposed to taking the first step until we have more and better knowledge as to the characteristics and the peculiar traits and the capacity of these people than we possess to-day.

Now, am I right about that? I want to call attention for just a moment to the report made by this committee last year. It was not a unanimous report; the report this year is unanimous. Now, why was it not unanimous last year? Because the Democratic members on that committee said last year:

We can not agree to the majority report of the committee for the reason that it indicates an intention on their part to make a new departure from our well-established custom of governing Territories. We believe that the newly acquired Territories should be governed as other Territories of the United States have been governed from the foundation of our Government, with a view that they may be ultimately admitted into the Union of States.

This year that objection is all swept away; Democrats and Republicans alike on that committee come up here and ask for the admission of Hawaii as a Territory of this Union.

Gentlemen, I want you to recall an incident which occurred here in this Chamber yesterday afternoon. To the proposition granting unrestricted suffrage to the Kanakas and the foreigners in Hawaii no opposition was made on the other side of the House; but the moment the question of the qualifications of voters comes up, the Mississippi plan, the plan of the Southern States, of restricting votes under an unrestricted representation, is again endeavored to be fastened upon this bill.

That is the proposition. I did not vote with my friend from Mississippi. I do not criticise his action. I did not so vote, because I would not attempt by a device to take away that which I was willing to grant by law. I would not vote for unrestricted, uneducated, unintelligent suffrage and then attempt to take it away by a device. I refused on that ground to vote for the proposition. I have no criticism to make upon the action of other gentlemen.

I refused on the same ground to vote for the proposition of the committee. I have no criticism to make upon the action of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. Perhaps I would do as they do, if I were in similar circumstances. I am not prepared to discuss that question; but as a New Englander who believes in a fair suffrage, an honest suffrage, an intelligent suffrage, I stand here now to say that neither in Puerto Rico, nor in the Philippines, nor in Hawaii, nor anywhere else, will I vote to put a Representative upon the floor of this House who is not elected by a constituency that knows what it is doing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I will take further time on the other amendment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the section giving Hawaii a Delegate in Congress, which is objected to, is one for the insertion of which in the bill reported by the commission I am in part responsible, as I was the sole person on the Hawaiian commission representing or in any way related to the House of Representatives. I asked on behalf of the House, as I believed its interests and the interests of Hawaii required that such a provision be inserted. The country we were providing for was of enormous wealth, of great energy, of contending interests, for which Congress would have to legislate.

I desired that in the case of this Territory, as in all instances that have preceded, we should have upon the floor of this House a representative man who was responsible, a man who could speak for those people, who could be questioned at any instant on aught that concerned them, a man who could be held accountable by the House, and who, if he stated aught that his constituents disapproved, could be visited by the reprobation of his own constituency—that public scorn which is the most dreaded punishment of public men. If Hawaii is denied a Delegate on the floor, we are certain to have here instead abundant delegates in the lobby, paid by private interests in that Territory to secure favors in legislation, as we have often seen in our experience here in other matters. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question at his convenience.

Mr. HITT. I have only five minutes, and then I will yield the floor to anyone else who wants to talk.

Mr. HILL. I will seek an opportunity to ask my question before the gentleman sits down.

Mr. HITT. We know that when a person is here representing special interests he is selected for experience, ability, adroitness, plausibility. He comes here in the pay of private interests to obtain special rights and privileges, always under pretense of the public good, but always at the expense of the general community; otherwise he would not be here. We want some one here who represents all the people of the Territory. [Applause.] We want some one here who has a representative character determined by the people themselves, who choose and send him, and to whom he must answer.

The gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. HILL] feared that we would have a disreputable or incompetent representative of an inferior class—the Kanakas. Why, sir, we had here constantly for many years a representative of the Kanaka kings and queens of the purely Kanaka government. Every old member here will recall with esteem the character of the ministers from Hawaii. Mr. Allen, who for many years sat on this floor representing with distinction a district of the State of Maine, went to those islands and afterwards came back here as minister, representing the Kanaka people and his royal master, a Kanaka. He was diligent, honest, zealous, a fit representative of the population of the Hawaiian Islands.

He was followed by Mr. Carter, whom many of us knew well, a distinguished, a most honorable and excellent man; then Mr. Mott Smith. All these had the privilege of this floor. Then there was Mr. Thurston more recently, whom a great many of you knew personally; and Mr. Hatch, one of the ablest members of the bar, who was recognized here for his integrity and ability; and Mr. Hastings, whose sudden and tragic death at the White House many of us remember—these delegates were often on this floor, but without the right of speech. They were chosen, some of them by the government under white domination, some of them by the Kanaka native government; but all were fit men.

There was also a Hawaiian lobby here from time to time, but always for special selfish objects. Every member knows by experience what a lobby is, and what the aim of a lobby agent is. Whether he is a distinguished gentleman, an ex-governor, an ex-judge, or a poor hireling picked up here in Washington, he is essentially a lobby agent, paid to look after a special interest. And representing this House on the commission, I believed we ought to have here upon this floor a man whom we could question, from whom we could derive direct information, who would have a representative character, a Delegate who would be responsible to the House and to a constituency. [Applause.]

Mr. BREWER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HITT. I will only take one moment as to the other subject which the gentleman raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended to allow him to complete his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is made by several gentlemen that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Now, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Every person whose name the gentleman has mentioned was appointed, not elected—every representative of that country.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that a commissioner appointed by Hawaii to the United States, to represent their business interests, appointed by the governor of Hawaii, who is himself appointed by the President of the United States, would be more likely, under that system of appointment, and that that would be a better guaranty of getting a good representative than you could have by a general vote of the people of the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. HITT. The difference would simply be that in the one case we would have the Delegate here in our presence whom we could interrogate, and in the other a commissioner going about the Departments, corridors, and committee rooms, with no voice on this floor, reduced to the likeness of an official lobbyist.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask just one more question, and then I will not trouble the gentleman any further. He has had a very large experience in diplomatic affairs. He is familiar with all the insular systems of the world. Does he know of a single insular government in the world, either in the system of Great Britain, France, Germany, or any other European power, that has a representative in the parliament of any of those countries?

Mr. HITT. The answer to that is ours is essentially a popular, republican, representative government, and a republic does not need always to take lessons from monarchies in the application of our own system. [Applause.]

Mr. BREWER. I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing that the people of Puerto Rico shall have a Delegate here in this House?

Mr. HITT. I will answer questions about Puerto Rico or Kamchatka and any other country when they are before the House. [Applause.] I do not want to be diverted to politics. The gentleman's question is political. I am talking now about the business that is immediately before the House.

I sympathize with much that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has said in apprehension of doing something to-day that would involve statehood hereafter for Hawaii. The gentleman referred to what I said on this floor years ago about Hawaiian statehood—that I was averse to the prospect and thought well of the proposition to make it a county of California.

I am sorry to add to what I said then that upon inquiry I found in California that there would be unanimous opposition in that State to the incorporation of Hawaii, with its population of an Asiatic character; and in the Hawaiian Islands there was not a soul who ever expressed approval to me of the suggestion made here of its becoming a county of California.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman—do I understand that he wishes a population which the State of California was unwilling to accept as a county to have from us representation as a full-fledged Territory in our Congress?

Mr. HITT. Well, that is argumentative. I merely stated what the sentiment was in California. We know the Chinaphobia that prevails in California, and it determined this question among Californians apparently at once. Gentlemen on the floor who represent California can contradict or confirm me.

Now, nothing that we might say to-day against Hawaiian statehood, no resolution or enactment or eloquent speech, can prevent this very Congress to-morrow or another Congress two years hence or a hundred years hence from undoing anything and everything that we now do.

We can not prevent another Congress from doing foolish or wise things. They can admit it as a State if they will. We can, after passing this bill to-day and in it passing the gentleman's proposition pledging impliedly that there shall be no statehood for Hawaii, to-morrow pass an enabling act. We can not bind our successors. We have no such faculty, no such approach to omnipotence, no command of the future. We legislate for to-day. I would gladly do anything I could to carry out the view expressed by the gentleman from Connecticut as to that part of his proposition, for I think it is at least harmless; but as to the Delegate, we want him right here on this floor. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] thinks that he can call from me, by his references this morning, words or tone apologetic in their character, the gentleman from Connecticut is mistaken.

The laws of the United States provide that every organized Territory of the United States shall have a Delegate upon this floor.

Mr. HILL. I wish the gentleman would show that to me in the Constitution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I believe the gentleman has complied with the Mississippi and Connecticut requisition for voting, and he can read for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. That provision is not in the Constitution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is no doubt about the fact that every Territory organized as a Territory of the United States is entitled to a Delegate upon this floor, and that that Delegate is, under the laws of the United States—I will amend my statement that far, if I said Constitution, I meant laws—entitled to the same salary and the same mileage as a member of Congress and entitled to every privilege of a member of Congress, except that of voting, on this floor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I stood here in my place and made the first Democratic speech in either House in opposition to the admission of Hawaii as a part of the United States, and I stated at that time the grounds of my opposition. I said, when discussing the admission of that country, that we must do one of two things: We must either permit it to take its part and parcel with us as an equal Territory of the United States, with the constitutional privilege of becoming, when Congress saw fit, a State of the United States, or else we must leave it outside of the United States.

I then stated upon this floor that when we were called upon to face Hawaiian problems, we should be called upon to face a colored race problem in Hawaii, and that when we were called upon to face it, we were going out of our way several thousand miles to hunt a new problem to add to other problems of that character that we already had and that were already too much for our management. Does the gentleman imagine that we of the South take any pride in the fact that we have been compelled to restrict suffrage in order to preserve civilization?

Mr. HILL. I do not. I am amazed at the fact, however, that you will vote, in insular possessions of the United States, to do the same thing over again.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the same necessity exists. I stated in the Hawaiian debate that whenever I was faced with that problem that, if I were the only Democrat in the United States to do so, I would stand for white supremacy in Hawaii just as I had stood for it in Mississippi, and I will. The gentleman speaks of restricted suffrage, as if restricted suffrage were dishonest or unfair suffrage. He knows better. There is nobody in the United States that ought to know better than a Connecticut man about that. I do not know of a better State government in the Union to-day than that of Connecticut, with the possible exception of that of the State of Mississippi, speaking politically, and yet in the State of Connecticut the town of New Haven and other cities are represented in the State legislature, under old antediluvian charters of the kings of England, by a few representatives, and many superannuated villages are represented by two or three times as many representatives.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, why? The gentleman speaks of restricted suffrage and I speak of restricted representation, and the two things go together.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? I spoke of unrestricted representation and a restriction of votes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am speaking of that, too, and Connecticut is with unrestricted representation upon this floor, with a restricted representation in the State of Connecticut of your cities compared with your rural districts. And, by the way, that you are right in having it just as you have it I do not dispute. It is your affair, and I have nothing to do with it, and I am not quarreling with it.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. We have no restricted suffrage in Connecticut.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am speaking of restricted representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended, and that he be given such time as he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended without limit. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman has misunderstood me.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. There is no restriction as to that. Every qualified voter may cast a vote for Representatives in Congress, for State officers, and members of the general assembly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand you think I have said restricted suffrage. I meant restricted representation.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. We have unrestricted representation and we have unrestricted suffrage. Our system of representation in our State legislature is two hundred and fifty years old. We elect our Representatives in Congress by an unrestricted suffrage.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I know it is over two hundred years old.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. But everybody votes. There is no disqualification except for crime.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand the gentleman from Connecticut. But there is also in Connecticut, if I have learned its system right, an educational qualification.

Mr. Chairman, in expressing myself if I used the phrase "restricted suffrage" with regard to Connecticut, I meant to use the phrase "restricted representation." What I meant to say was that "restricted representation" is essentially the same as "restricted suffrage," and unequal representation is essentially the same thing as unequal suffrage.

Now, we might just as well be honest with one another, my friends, upon both sides of this House. Let us lay aside for a moment the fact that I am a Democrat and you are Republicans, and let us talk as men who have had forced upon us, and also in your case forced upon yourselves by your own action, a problem which we must solve, and which we must solve as wise men, as statesmen, as men with some view to the future, as men with common sense, and not merely as Republicans and as Democrats.

Now, taking that view of it, I am prepared to say that the very worst thing that can happen to the Hawaiian Islands to-day or to-morrow would be to have Kanaka rule or colored-race rule in Hawaii. I speak advisedly, not only with my own personal observation and experience, but with all history behind me. Now, then, how are you going to avoid it? You must avoid it by restricted suffrage.

I am not talking to you as Republicans or Democrats. And what sort of restricted suffrage must you have? Something which, while it is not based upon an express discrimination on account of race or color, is based upon something which actually discriminates against color and race. Else you must have Kanaka rule. Take your choice. For my part I have taken mine long since. I asked you, in God's name, to relieve me, as one of the representatives of the American people, of this additional problem; but you annexed Hawaii.

Do you imagine that I do not recognize that the symmetry, the rounded proportions of a Democratic system are marred by the necessity of a restricted or qualified suffrage, even though the end and purpose, the aim and object, be the preservation of civilization itself? No wonder California did not want Hawaii as a county in California and part of it. Why? Because California has had some little experience with race problems, too.

Soon after I came to the Congress of the United States I said to the Representatives of California and the Pacific slope, from my place upon this floor, that I was willing to leave to the white people of the Pacific slope the business of attending to their Chinese race problem, and was willing to vote with them with that aim in any measure they desired enacted here—believing that, while they had the strength of a giant, they would not be brutish or foolish enough to use it like a giant; and that I arrogated to myself and my own people the claim that, when faced with a problem of the same kind, we would not use the power intrusted by circumstances to us with the force of brutish giants.

I say now, as I said then, that it is the duty of the white race everywhere to lift up those below them so far as they can, but that there is no injunction in sacred or in human law calling upon me or calling upon you to "herd with narrow foreheads, ignorant of our race's gains." They will progress as time passes, and so will we; and as we mount one rung higher on the ladder of civilization we will hold our hands down to them and raise them to the rung next below. I have no idea on my own part that they will ever be on the same rung; and I have no hypocrisy about it.

Now, then, having taken the position that there must be restricted suffrage in Hawaii, I come to the question of whether representation ought to be restricted. It ought not. Why, it is bad enough to be compelled by the exigencies of the situation to deprive the people there of an equal partnership in the destinies of their own country. For remember that it is not a problem of governing a white man's country with white supremacy, as it is here, but there you have carried yourselves over to a colored man's country. You have superimposed yourselves there until as a matter of necessity you must now govern them in accordance with your ideas, and your ideas are those of Caucasian civilization.

It is bad enough to be compelled by the exigency of the situation, I say, to restrict the suffrage. It would be absolutely mean to deprive them of a representation, merely by speech in your presence; to refuse even the poor right of petition to somebody standing here speaking for these people, saying, as such an one will have the right to say, "I represent not only the white people of Hawaii, but I represent Hawaii. I know the conditions of whites and Kanakas alike and have authority of knowledge to call your attention to them."

Why, does the gentleman imagine that because New Haven has not a proper representation in the Connecticut legislature that therefore New Haven ought to have no representation in the Connecticut legislature at all?

Mr. HILL. I will answer the gentleman that he fails to comprehend the state of representation in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. How many representatives has the city of New Haven?

Mr. HILL. We have two representatives. The senate is the popular body in the State of Connecticut, and the house of representatives is the representation of towns. It is precisely the reverse of the Congress of the United States, and when the gentleman makes the statement that there is no popular body in the general assembly in the State of Connecticut, he states that which gives a false impression; and I will say further, that if there are any inequalities in the popular body it is due to Democratic legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have not made the statement that there is no popular body in your general assembly, but I do state that your general assembly as a whole is not a body of either popular or equal representation. I am not quarreling with the fact that Connecticut manages her own affairs to suit herself. I think as a rule she has managed them wisely and well. I differ with the gentleman in politics, but I do believe that Connecticut has had one of the most honest and one of the most incorrupt State governments in the nation, mainly owing to the fact, perhaps, that her rural vote and country gentlemen have dominated her politics.

Understand me, I am not quarreling about that, but I am merely illustrating the idea that you, of all men, can not stand upon this floor and contend for the idea that the people ought to have no representation, because you are unwilling to give your own people equal representation.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, as my distinguished friend from Mississippi has alluded to Connecticut and to New Haven, I wish to say this in reference to that matter. The State of Connecticut was organized on a different plan from any other State in the nation——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not want to seem to be in the slightest degree discourteous. The gentleman knows that it has always been my habit to yield whenever interrupted, and I thought I was yielding to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SPERRY. No, sir; I rose for the purpose of making some remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I can not yield for that purpose. The gentleman can get time of the House subsequently. I can not yield for the purpose of allowing him to inject a speech into my remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, either Hawaii is a part of the United States or Hawaii is not a part of the United States. Gentlemen have contended in the case of the Philippine Islands and Puerto Rico, which are in military occupancy and which were taken by conquest, that they are not a part of the United States until Congress expressly declares them to be. But that contention, sound or unsound, can not have sway in the case of Hawaii, because Hawaii was admitted into the Union by her own petition, upon her own request, and by our consent. She has become a part of the United States. Whatever the constitutional situation may be or may not be in connection with the Philippines and Puerto Rico, based upon the idea that they are in military occupancy, that sort of argument can not apply to Hawaii.

Now, then, if Hawaii is a part of the United States, she is entitled to all the rights of every other Territory in the United States, and one of those rights is to be represented, by the power of speech at any rate, upon this floor. [Applause.] Now, I thank the House for its courtesy and attention and for waiving in my behalf its rule of procedure for the moment.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman answer me a question? How about Alaska and the District of Columbia?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would to-morrow organize a Territorial government for Alaska, and give Alaska a representative upon this floor, and it ought to be done at the very earliest practicable moment. I would do the same thing for the District of Columbia, and in both cases I would have a restricted suffrage. [Applause.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this matter has been exhausted, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a remark or two, by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, originally I was opposed to taking in the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman from Missouri pardon me a suggestion? I will not take up any of his time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section close with six minutes to the gentleman from Missouri and five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish you would make it ten. I may not be able to close my remarks in six minutes.

Mr. KNOX. Ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri and five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the debate on this section be closed at the expiration of fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, originally I was opposed to taking in the Sandwich Islands. If that were still an open question, I would be just as much opposed to it as ever, but the incident of annexation is closed. We have them for better or for worse, and it is our duty both to ourselves and to them to do the best we can in a difficult situation.

Therefore I am in favor of giving these people a Delegate upon this floor of the character they see fit to send hither to explain their situation and their wants. If they wish to send a white man, all well and good. I hope they will. If they want to send a Kanaka—if that is the proper name—all well and good. That is their business, not ours.

I am teetotally opposed to any portion of the people of the United States being taxed without having representation. That is the principle for which we waged the Revolutionary war, and it was well worth fighting for. Now, I wish to reenforce what my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said. It does not lie in the mouth of the people of New England to come here and taunt Southerners about their methods of running elections.

In Missouri every man, great or small, rich or poor, white or black, has the right to vote once and to have his vote counted; but I am a Southern man in feeling and in thought, and I know that what they do down there they do under an impulse of self-preservation too strong to be resisted.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] quoted approvingly part of my speech, delivered here in the summer of 1898, against the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. He describes it as "a remarkable and prophetic speech." I am obliged to him for his flattering indorsement; I wish he had quoted it all. I am willing to rest my fame not only as an orator but as a prophet upon that speech. [Laughter.]

The same gentleman asks: "Do you want a Congressional Delegate from the District of Columbia?" Nobody has yet answered his query, so I will proceed to do so myself. Yes; I want a Delegate in Congress from the District of Columbia. Not only that, but I introduced a bill in the last Congress, also one in this, erecting this District into a Territory and reenfranchising the people thereof, conferring upon them the right of self-government, and authorizing them, inter alia, to elect a common council and a Delegate to this House; but I have never been able to get a report on the bill.

In the next Congress the Democrats will have the House, and I will have a favorable report on that bill or worry the committee into insanity or the apoplexy. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Why did you not present and urge your bill when your party had the House?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Because I was a green hand in Congressional legislation; but I am "green" in that respect no longer.

I will print my bill as part of my remarks, so as to set members to thinking seriously about it. Here it is:

A bill to create a Territory of the District of Columbia by the name of the Territory of Columbia and to grant Territorial government to the same.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the District of Columbia is hereby created a Territory by the name of the Territory of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That all male citizens of said Territory over 21 years of age, who have not been convicted of a felony and who have resided within said District one whole year prior to the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1900, are qualified electors to vote for all Territorial officers and upon all Territorial questions.

SEC. 3. That the existing District government shall continue until January 1, 1901, and the laws now in force shall continue in force until changed or repealed by the Territorial legislature.

SEC. 4. That prior to January 1, 1901, the President of the United States shall appoint a governor, secretary, and marshal for said Territory from among the qualified voters thereof, who shall hold their offices for a term of four years from said 1st day of January, A. D. 1901, unless sooner removed for good and sufficient cause.

SEC. 5. That the legislature of said Territory shall consist of a senate and house of representatives. The senate shall be composed of 11 members, who shall be qualified voters of said Territory at least 30 years of age, whose term shall be four years. The house shall be composed of 22 members, who shall be qualified voters at least 25 years old, and whose term shall be two years.

SEC. 6. That the said Territory shall be entitled to a Delegate to the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the present Commissioners of the District forthwith to divide the said Territory into 11 legislative districts, as nearly equal in population as possible, each of which shall be entitled to 1 senator and 2 representatives in the Territorial legislature.

SEC. 8. That on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1900, an election shall be held within said Territory for the purpose of electing senators and representatives in said Territorial legislature and a Delegate to the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 9. That it is hereby made the duty of said Commissioners to provide polling booths, poll books, tally sheets, printed ballots, and other appliances necessary for said election, and to appoint judges and clerks for the same in such numbers as to them shall seem best: Provided, however, That not more than one-half of such judges and clerks shall be appointed from one political party.

SEC. 10. That election returns shall be certified to said Commissioners, and they shall canvass the same and issue certificates of election to those elected.

SEC. 11. That each house of said legislature shall be the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its members.

SEC. 12. That at high noon January 1, 1901, both houses of said legislature shall meet at places prepared by said Commissioners and shall organize for business by electing such officers as shall be necessary, and may continue in session for ninety days and no more.

SEC. 13. That senators and representatives in said legislature shall receive $10 per day during the session, to be paid out of the revenues of said Territory.

SEC. 14. That said legislature shall have power to enact all necessary laws, to levy taxes, to disburse the revenues, to do all things usually done by Territorial legislatures, and to provide for the election and appointment of all subordinate officers and to fix their compensation.

Last Saturday night, while delivering a lecture before the faculty and students of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, I received a telegraphic order from Senator JAMES K. JONES, of Arkansas, chairman of the Democratic national committee, directing me to go to Rhode Island and make two Democratic speeches. I went, and I learned a great deal.

I found a state of affairs which utterly amazed me. They have such an outrageous apportionment there that the great city of Providence has only 1 State senator out of 37 and 12 representatives out of 72 in the lower house of the legislature.

Ex-Governor Davis told me of some town with only 267 voters which elects a senator.

Mr. CAPRON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield for a question only.

Mr. CAPRON. What the gentleman speaks of is the result of a provision of our State constitution which we have attempted several times to change, but our efforts have been defeated by the Democrats.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will tell you about that, too, a little later on.

Mr. CAPRON. That was repealed years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait; I am making this speech. I yielded for a question; not for a speech.

Governor Davis stated further that under the present unfair and un-American arrangement it could be shown by mathematical demonstration that about 36,000 people out of over 400,000 elect a majority of both branches of the legislature, and thereby absolutely control the political affairs of the State.

Yet, we hear loud lamentations about unfair election laws in the South.

In Rhode Island they still have that relic of barbarism known as a "property qualification."

If a man owns $134 worth of real estate, he is a voter for all purposes.

If he does not own that much realty, but owns and pays taxes on $134 worth of personal property, he is a voter for all purposes.

The almighty dollar and not intelligence is the qualification for full suffrage.

Then they have what they call registered voters, who are voters for certain purposes and are not voters for certain other purposes.

Yet we hear a great deal of hypocritical whining about the suppression of voters down South.

I commend to these philanthropic doctors the Scripture, which says, "Physician, heal thyself."

Under this outrageous Rhode Island apportionment for legislative purposes the Democrats would have to carry the State by 25,000 or 30,000 majority in order to have a majority on joint ballot in the legislature, whereby they could elect a Senator of the United States, and by a much larger majority in order to control both houses of the State legislature.

I was told by Mr. Green, chairman of the State Democratic committee, that the Republican supreme court judges had given the Republican governor an opinion to the effect that there is no power lodged anywhere to authorize the people of Rhode Island to hold a constitutional convention to frame a new constitution to cure this outrageous apportionment and other ills and oppressions from which the people of Rhode Island now suffer!

The only way they can secure a constitutional convention to form a new constitution is first to submit and adopt an amendment authorizing the calling of such a convention!

Here is the peculiar modus operandi of adopting a constitutional amendment: The proposed amendment must be passed by a majority of each house of two different legislatures and then be adopted at the polls!

As the little towns now elect a large majority of each house of the legislature, and as such amendment would deprive the small towns of a large portion of their present unjust power and unfair representation, the chances are that no such amendment can be passed through each house of two succeeding legislatures. It looks like nothing short of a revolution would give Republican Rhode Island a fair and modern system of voting—such as we have in Democratic Missouri.

I was told that in the city of Woonsocket 400 men begged the assessor to put them on the tax list, offering to swear and to prove that they possessed the $134 of property necessary to entitle them to vote under Rhode Island's mediæval constitution. The assessor, who was a Republican, refused to put them on the tax list. They were Democrats and undertook to mandamus the assessor and compel him to do so, but the judge, a Republican, decided that they were too late in their application, as the tax lists had already been made up! [Laughter.]

The next time they endeavored to compel the assessor by mandamus to put them on before he completed his lists; but the judge decided that the assessor was not required to put them on on any particular day of the designated time, and that he might intend to put them on the next day or the next, and again denied them the prayer of their petition—the right to be taxed and to vote. Once they were too late. Next time they were too early. [Laughter.]

I guess that that is the only instance in the entire history of the human race where men asked, begged, and instituted a lawsuit to be permitted to be taxed.

The gentleman from Connecticut says that the government of the District of Columbia, where nobody can vote, is a model government—the best in the United States, as I understood him. I deny that proposition. It is a carpetbag government, for the most part. I am not criticising the individuals who compose it. They may be good and efficient men, or they may be the reverse; but the people who fill the District of Columbia offices—not the Federal offices, but the local offices—ought to be bona fide citizens of the District and not broken-down politicians from the States fastened upon this people to eat up their substance.

Congress sits here two days in the week as a common council for the city of Washington—a duty for which it is unfit by reason of ignorance of the wants of the people and of the proper relation of one thing to another.

The fact that under the shadow of the nation's Capitol 300,000 American citizens, white and black, are completely disfranchised, not permitted to vote on any proposition under the sun, are reduced to the low estate of being the nation's wards, have no more voice in the government under which they live than have the inhabitants of Africa, is the saddest commentary to be found anywhere on the theory of representative government.

Why should they not vote? It is a manly, invigorating exercise. I would like to be here the day they elect the first Delegate to Congress. It would double discount a Donnybrook fair. There would be 300 candidates at least. [Laughter.]

During the Fifty-third Congress there was to be a meeting downtown to agitate for the restoration of self-government. I was invited to speak. I accepted the invitation. It was so announced in some of the papers. A delegation composed of Democrats and Republicans waited on me to protest. I asked them why the people of the District should not enjoy the right of suffrage. A Republican answered: "The damned niggers and poor whites would vote us into bankruptcy!"

A MEMBER. Do you say that a Republican said "damned niggers?"

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I was told by one who claimed to know that he was a Republican.

It appears to me that it is rather late in our history to give color to the absurd and unjust proposition that a poor white is not fit to vote by disfranchising a whole populous city and district.

The refusal of the right of suffrage to the people of this District turns back the hands of the clock more than a century. It is a dangerous performance, because the plan may be copied in some other part of the Union and in every other part. It is an open confession in the face of the world that pro tanto our experiment in representative government is a failure.

I want to say here and now that if a colored man is good enough to vote in the Ninth Congressional district of Missouri, he is good enough to vote in the District of Columbia and to say how his taxes shall be levied and disbursed—to take a hand in running his own government.

I am not in favor of making an experimental governmental political station of the Sandwich Islands, as you are making one out of the District of Columbia. The truth is that for sixty years every bad piece of legislation that Congress wanted to adopt was first tried on the helpless people of this District.

If it did not destroy them, then they extended the experiment to the rest of us. [Laughter.] I agree fully with my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that we can not bind the future. I wanted to bind the future when we annexed the Hawaiian Islands. We can not bind future Congresses by saying that we will not make a State out of them; but we can say that those people, being ours now, shall have a chance to educate themselves in the difficult art of self-government, and that we will not treat them in the outrageous manner in which we treat the people of this District.

I want to say further that every time we take in a new island, so far as I am concerned, you will have to extend to it the Constitution of the United States and the liberties that we enjoy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks the bill in regard to the District of Columbia and to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, I should not arise at this time to say anything concerning this matter, but I want to set one thing right which has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] about the State of Connecticut.

The State of Connecticut has been alluded to here, and so has the city of New Haven. When the State of Connecticut was formed, it was formed of the little towns which made up the State. Those little towns were unlike any other towns that I know of in the United States. Those little towns were little republics of themselves, and when the constitution of 1818 was formed a provision was inserted in the preamble that all the rights, privileges, and immunities which the people of Connecticut had received from their ancestors were vouchsafed to them under the new constitution, besides all of the original towns were given two representatives.

Now, some towns have increased largely in population. At the time our constitution was formed the towns were substantially equal in population. There was but little difference; but since then a town here and there has arisen, like New Haven, like Hartford, like the towns up through the valley of Naugatuck. Those towns have increased, but the original towns have their two representatives in the general assembly. The small original towns which have not greatly increased in population still have their two representatives. It is a constitutional provision; it is a right which they received from their ancestors, and the reason why the representation is not changed in Connecticut to-day is as I have stated. The city of New Haven has 125,000 population, and the city of Hartford probably 80,000, but they are only entitled to two representatives under the constitution.

Now, we should not care to change places with the other towns in the State. New Haven has grown, and Hartford has grown, and yet they have only their two representatives. Now, when an attempt is made to amend the constitution, or if an amendment is offered to the constitution, the little towns largely outnumber the large towns, and the little towns are jealous of their rights, for which I do not blame them, and they do not propose to give to the cities any more representation in the general assembly than they originally had, to wit, two from each town, and only two. That is the situation in Connecticut, and I thought it was but right that I should have you understand our position, and how we have come into the situation that we are in, and how it is impossible, in my judgment, to change that system of representation. Yet the good old State of Connecticut has a history that she may well be proud of. Connecticut was the first State to give civil liberty to man by a written constitution. The Newman barn constitution at New Haven, and the Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield constitution will remain for all time a monument to the judgment, the wisdom, and the patriotism of the early settlers of Connecticut. [Great applause.]

Mr. KNOX. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL COURT.

SEC. 87. That a judicial district of the United States is established for the Territory of Hawaii, to be called the district of Hawaii, which shall be included in the ninth judicial circuit of the United States. The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal of the United States for the said district. The district court for the said district shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in a circuit court, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court. The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the Territory of Hawaii. Regular terms of said courts shall be held at Honolulu on the second Monday in April and October and at Hilo on the last Wednesday in January of each year; and special terms may be held at such times and places in said district as the said judge may deem expedient.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to that section which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 87, page 91, line 7, add the following:

"The said district judge shall appoint a clerk for said court at a salary of $3,000 per annum, and shall appoint a reporter of said court at a salary of $1,200 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 87 and insert the following:

"FEDERAL COURT.

"That there shall be established in said Territory a district court to consist of one judge, who shall reside therein and be called the district judge. The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal of the United States for the said district, and said judge, attorney, and marshal shall hold office for six years unless sooner removed by the President. Said court shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in a circuit court of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court, and said judge shall have and exercise in the Territory of Hawaii all the powers conferred by the laws of the United States upon the judges of district and circuit courts of the United States. Writs of error and appeals from said district court shall be had and allowed to the circuit court of appeals in the Ninth judicial circuit in the same manner as writs of error and appeals are allowed from circuit courts to circuit courts of appeals as provided by law, and the laws of the United States relating to juries and jury trials shall be applicable to said district court. The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the Territory of Hawaii. Regular terms of said court shall be held at Honolulu on the second Monday in April and October and at Hilo on the last Wednesday in January of each year; and special terms may be held at such times and places in said district as the said judge may deem expedient."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will state to the chairman of the committee and to the members of the House that this provision is a Senate provision. I desire to call the attention of members to the further fact that by the section read in the House bill no term is fixed for the judge, the marshal, or the district attorney, nor is any reference made as to how long they shall hold.

Mr. KNOX. The court established by the House bill is a constitutional court, and the terms of its officers are regulated by law—the judge for life and the marshal for four years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senate provision is to limit the terms of these three officers to six years. I think that accords with the vote of the House the other day in limiting the terms of the circuit judges to four years. There has been a theory that these officers ought to hold for a long time. In my judgment, we ought to limit the time. The amendment I offer, which is a Senate provision, limits the term of each of these officers to six years. The Senate provision also says that they shall reside in the Territory. That provision is absent in the section that I desire to have stricken out.

This provision was well considered by the Senate, and in my judgment, after carefully looking over both sections, the Senate provision which I have offered as an amendment is the better of the two.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not seem to take in the broad distinction which there is in the bill of the House from that of the Senate bill. He picks out different items without considering the broad distinction. The Senate creates a legislative court under the general power of the Constitution that Congress has authority to regulate and provide for the Territory and other property of the United States. If I may be permitted to refer to the discussion in the Senate, it turned, not upon the wisdom or desirability of a Federal court, but upon the constitutional power of Congress to create a Federal court in a Territory. Now, this provides for a Federal court, a constitutional court. If it is a constitutional court, then the tenure of its officers is regulated by the Constitution, and there is no power in this House to change it. If, on the other hand, it is changed and made a legislative court, then, of course, all its provisions are entirely within the jurisdiction of the House to change.

Now, the desirability of establishing a constitutional court is for the purpose of entirely separating the local and Territorial litigation from the Federal litigation. We make a Federal court having strictly Federal jurisdiction, from which appeals and writs of error lie to the Supreme Court and circuit court of appeals. The Senate, on the other hand, creates a district court with some Federal jurisdiction, at the same time providing that appeals and writs of error from the supreme court of the Territory shall lie to the Ninth judical circuit. We have there a court of mixed jurisdiction, from which confusion will inevitably result. A great deal of time was spent upon the consideration of this provision and the House provision was unanimously agreed to by the committee.

Let me suggest that we will have trouble if we legislate according to the gentleman's provision. Suppose a judge is sick and that he has to go away; perhaps the President would not like to remove him, and, not being a constitutional court, the judge of the district of California could not go there to preside. I think the only fear that there was when this question was first mooted among lawyers as to Hawaii courts and the establishment of a Federal court in the Territory has passed away upon reflection and consultation, and it is for the benefit of Hawaii as a Territory that this jurisdiction be kept separate, and that they have a regular Federal court of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The suggestion of the amendment is that they might have an appeal to the Ninth or California district.

Mr. KNOX. Of course it does, and if that court is established they may appeal from the supreme court of the Territory, because you have a double jurisdiction. It is our purpose to entirely separate them; and I would say to the gentleman that if there is any doubt about the constitutionality of this question in conference, why, then, of course, a special provision will be adopted. I wish that the gentleman would not offer the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Upon the suggestion that this matter will go into conference anyway, I will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LANE. What about my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 92. That the public property ceded and transferred to the United States by the republic of Hawaii under the joint resolution of annexation, approved July 7, 1898, shall be and remain in the possession, use, and control of the government of the Territory of Hawaii, and shall be maintained, managed, and cared for by it, at its own expense, until otherwise provided for by Congress, or taken for the uses and purposes of the United States by direction of the President or of the governor of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 93, section 92, line 2, add the following:

"And all moneys in the Hawaiian treasury and all the revenues and other property acquired by the republic of Hawaii since said cession shall be and remain the property of the Territory of Hawaii."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 93. That the following officers shall receive the following annual salaries, to be paid by the United States: The governor, $5,000; the secretary of the Territory, $3,000; the United States district judge, $5,000; the United States marshal, $2,000; the United States district attorney, $2,000. And the governor shall receive annually, in addition to his salary, the sum of $500 for stationery, postage, and incidentals; also his traveling expenses while absent from the capital on official business, and the sum of $2,000 annually for his private secretary.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 93, section 93, in line 6, after the word "dollars," add the words "and the chief justice of the supreme court of the Territory, $5,500, and associate justices, $5,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I offer an amendment to follow the last amendment. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "judge" of the last amendment, "salaries of the said chief justice and associates of the supreme court and the judges of the circuit court, as above provided for, shall be paid by the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That provides that the salaries of the United States courts, the stenographer, and clerk shall be paid by the United States, and the salaries of the Territorial judges shall be paid by the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. What salaries?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The salaries of the Territorial judges shall be paid by the Territory.

Mr. KNOX. The circuit court judges?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And the judges of the supreme court of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. Well.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROCEEDINGS FOR OPENING FISHERIES TO CITIZENS.

SEC. 97. That any person who claims a private right to any such fishery shall, within two years after the taking effect of this act, file his petition in a circuit court of the Territory of Hawaii, setting forth his claim to such fishing right, service of which petition shall be made upon the attorney-general, who shall conduct the case for the Territory, and such case shall be conducted as an ordinary action at law.

That if such fishing right be established, the governor of the Territory of Hawaii may proceed, in a manner provided by law for the condemnation of property for public use, to condemn such private right of fishing to the use of the citizens of the United States upon making just compensation, which compensation, when lawfully ascertained, shall be paid out of any money in the treasury of the Territory of Hawaii not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 97 by striking out the last five words, to wit——

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw it. There was a break in the section. When I drafted the amendment it occurred to me that that was not the section. What I meant to offer as an amendment is this: In line 23, section 97, the last five words are, "an ordinary action at law." I want to insert in lieu of those words "ordinary actions at law or in equity." The committee seem to assume that——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please suspend and send the amendment to the desk. It will then be reported to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 97 by striking out the last five words in line 23, to wit, "an ordinary action at law," and substitute these words: "ordinary actions at law or in equity."

Mr. GILBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said, the amendment is not very material, but it ought to be inserted, because the report of the committee seems to assume that in settling controversies in the court upon questions of that sort it is always a purely legal issue. Lawyers know that that sort of question is very frequently by equity suit, and it ought to be ordinary actions at law and actions in equity.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILBERT. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. If I understood the gentleman's amendment, it is this: If in the settlement of property rights condemnation proceedings were necessary, it should be in courts of law or in courts of equity. Is that correct?

Mr. GILBERT. It is.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does he not think that the provision of the Constitution of the United States providing that no property shall be taken for public use without due process of law means a trial by jury, and therefore is an action at law?

Mr. GILBERT. In the Kentucky practice in a proceeding for the condemnation of property for public uses we do not necessarily have a jury. I think this means process by due course of law in the courts. We do not necessarily have a jury trial.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to say that this question does not deal with the right but with the method of procedure. Some method of procedure must be provided, in the same way as taking lands for a public highway. When you condemn property for a public use and compensation is made according to a certain method of procedure, we provide the method by which it shall be done, the same as an action at law. If you include equity in it, then no method of procedure is provided.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman does not catch the force of my amendment. The bill restricts the procedure to common-law cases. By the terms of your bill the vested right is destroyed unless the party can vindicate it in court by a common-law issue, by a trial by ordinary proceedings at common law. Now, by this amendment I merely broaden the rights of the man who is claiming the vested right, so that if he can show the courts that he has a vested right in the property, as the issue is an equitable one, he can maintain it. His right to property is none the less if it is an equitable one, but upon the terms of this bill he is confined to a common-law action as contradistinguished from an equitable proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 94, section 97, line 34, strike out the words "the governor" and insert in lieu thereof "the attorney-general."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to return to the amendment adopted on the question of salaries of judges being paid by the Territory of Hawaii, and ask to add an amendment.

Mr. KNOX. What section is it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will ask the Clerk to read the original amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The salaries of said chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and the judges of the circuit court as above provided shall be paid by the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That was the amendment adopted. Now, I propose an amendment to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to section 93 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The judges of the circuit courts, of whom the two judges for the first circuit shall each receive an annual salary of $4,000, and the judges for the second, third, fourth, and fifth circuits, respectively, an annual salary of $3,000 each.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 99. That all vessels carrying Hawaiian registers, permanent or temporary, on August 12, 1898, together with the following-named vessels claiming Hawaiian register, Star of France, Euterpe, Star of Russia, Falls of Clyde, and Wilscott, shall be entitled to be registered as American vessels, with the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to hear from the chairman of the committee some explanation of this section of the bill, which, in my judgment, ought not to be in the bill at all, because of the superior jurisdiction of the maritime laws of the United States over the Territorial law, and particularly because of certain dangerous provisions in the bill, or rather the lack of a careful provision, in my judgment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, this section provides that Hawaiian ships—ships that had a Hawaiian register at the time of annexation—are given a United States register. They could have no other register; they would be sailing without a flag and without a nationality. The Hawaiian flag went down upon the government building in Hawaii on August 12, 1898, and the American flag was raised with proper ceremonies. No flag of Hawaii from that moment means anything, and a vessel sailing under a Hawaiian flag is sailing under no flag and no nationality.

Now, there were brought to the attention of the committee by many gentlemen claims that there were other vessels than those which had a Hawaiian register that were entitled to a Hawaiian register upon this ground; that they had been bought in good faith by Hawaiians and intended for a Hawaiian register, but sailing under a temporary register, or sea letter, and without any notice of this transfer of sovereignty or of the annexation resolution. Now, if that were so, then they should be entitled to the benefits of this register; but there were statements made that there were very many vessels that would claim the benefit of this American register, and you can see that it would be a matter of thousands of dollars in the pockets of anyone who could obtain an American register by claiming that they were purchased and intended for a Hawaiian register.

So the committee, fearing the result of a general provision, and the number who would claim that they owned vessels intended for a Hawaiian register, heard and voted upon the particular cases presented in order to determine as a question of fact whether these vessels were purchased in good faith, purchased without the knowledge of a transfer of Hawaii to the United States. And the committee, having heard these cases, named these vessels in this section, so that there might be no mistake whatever, and no claim made hereafter by men seeking to get in and get a United States register by claiming that they were intended for the Hawaiian register.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "eight," in line 5 of section 99, these words:

And which were owned bona fide by citizens of the United States or citizens of Hawaii.

Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KNOX. I make no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But I want to say a few words upon it.

Mr. KNOX. All right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This provision of the bill is an attempt to legislate about matters that do not belong to any Territorial organization; but to that I shall not make any strong objection. A bill is already pending, and will no doubt be passed, with the proper limitations and restrictions, admitting to American registry all vessels that ought to be covered by any act of the United States. In the investigation which the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has made it appears that following the annexation of these islands a very loose system of registry was in vogue, and a great many ships suddenly took on Hawaiian registries, so as to get into our coastwise trade by this loose system of registry, when they could not have gotten in in any other way. These registries were issued to foreign ships, strictly foreign ships, that had no possible connection with our merchant marine.

Now, the purpose of this amendment is to minimize, at least, the injury which I think this bill is liable to do, by providing that at the time of registry these ships must have been owned by American citizens or citizens of Hawaii. As the bill stands now, anybody who during that period of time secured surreptitiously an American register can come right in under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, only a word. As to our committee usurping any jurisdiction, let me say that this bill, with the provision to which the gentleman objects, was recommended by the commission which Congress authorized and the President appointed and which visited Hawaii. We took the bill as we found it, with this provision.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR, it was agreed to.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Immediately after section 99 add the following:

"SEC. —. At the expiration of one year after the passage and approval of this act the coasting trade between the islands aforesaid and any other portion of the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two coasting districts, except those provisions relating to license and enrollment: And provided, That such vessels must sail under a register."

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered and which has just been read is one that was adopted upon my suggestion by the committee, and has the unanimous indorsement of that committee.

This amendment, in substance, simply provides that the shipping laws of the United States governing the coasting trade shall be extended to and include the Territory of Hawaii; provided that such law shall not be in force and effect until one year from and after the passage and approval of this act.

It may be said by some that this amendment of mine is not in favor of American shipping interests, because it will leave this field open to foreign vessels for the period of the next year. However, in truth and in fact, my amendment is designed for the benefit and encouragement of American shipping interests.

Let me illustrate briefly the practical application of this amendment of mine. At the present time there are not anywhere near a sufficient number of vessels engaged in the trade between the United States and Hawaii, either to carry into Hawaii the products of this country or to carry from Hawaii her products. This present scarcity of vessels will be greatly increased during this summer, when every available vessel on the Pacific coast will be engaged in the Alaskan trade. The great gold excitement at Nome, Alaska, will take every available vessel on the coast, because the profits of the Alaskan run are much greater than those of the Hawaiian run. Then that will leave us with not enough American vessels to carry on this trade. If the coasting laws are now extended to this Territory of Hawaii, this extension to take effect upon the passage of this act, then all foreign vessels—which are now carrying our Puget Sound trade with Hawaii—will be driven out. Then we will have neither foreign vessels to carry the trade nor American ships to take the place of the foreign ships.

There is no man in this House who is more anxious to build up American shipping than I am and who will go further with his vote to favor American shipping; but I do not want this bill passed without my amendment, for in effect it would destroy our traffic with Hawaii by taking away our foreign ships without giving us anything in their place. Do not let us destroy what we now have until we are ready to replace it with something else equally as good.

It will take at least a year for any shipyard to build a ship suitable for the trade between the Pacific coast and Hawaii. If my amendment shall prevail, this will be notice to every Hawaiian transportation line that within a year after the passage of this act, if they expect to continue in this trade, they must have American ships to do the carrying trade. Hence they will at once place their orders for ships for this traffic, and thus will my amendment offer encouragement for the upbuilding of American shipping.

If the amendment shall not prevail, we of the Pacific Northwest will be left for the next year with no carrying trade to and from Hawaii, and the transportation companies, who have at great expense been the pioneers in building up this trade, will lose the money they have spent in building it up, and neither the American people nor the Hawaiian people will benefit thereby, but the products of each country will lie rotting for a year waiting for a market.

Mr. Chairman, I trust my amendment will prevail.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. CUSHMAN was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 100. That the portion of the public domain heretofore known as crown land is hereby declared to have been on August 12, 1898, and prior thereto, the property of the Hawaiian government, and to be free and clear from any trust of or concerning the same, and from all claim of any nature whatsoever upon the rents, issues, and profits thereof. It shall be subject to alienation and other uses as may be provided by law.

Mr. MCRAE. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, in line 17, the words "alienation and other uses" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "such disposal;" so as to read: "It shall be subject to such disposal as may be provided by law."

Mr. KNOX. It seems to me that the change of language does not make any difference whatever in the effect of the provision.

Mr. MCRAE. I submit that the words proposed in my amendment are the proper words to be used in reference to the public domain.

The question being taken on the amendment; there were—ayes 46, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 102. That Chinese in the Hawaiian Islands when this act takes effect may within one year thereafter obtain certificates of residence as required by "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," approved May 5, 1892, as amended by an act approved November 3, 1893, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States,' approved May 5, 1892," and until the expiration of said year shall not be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States if found therein without such certificates.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section just read the following:

Provided, however, That no Chinese laborer, whether he shall hold such certificate or not, shall be allowed to enter any State, Territory, or district of the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 102 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 102. All Chinese and other Asiatics who came or were brought into Hawaii since August 12, 1898, under any contracts or contract whereby they bound themselves or are or were bound to any term of service, shall depart therefrom and from the United States within one year from the taking effect of this act; and any such persons being in Hawaii or elsewhere within the United States after the expiration of such period shall be dealt with as if found within the United States in violation of the Chinese exclusion act."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the object of that amendment is plainly apparent from the reading of it. Since August 12, 1898, many thousand Chinese and other Asiatics have been brought to the Hawaiian Islands under labor contracts, and they are there now. If this amendment be adopted these people will have to take themselves away or be taken away within a year after the taking effect of this act, and such of them as may fail to go at the expiration of that time will be there in violation of the laws for the exclusion of Chinese, and will be deported or otherwise dealt with, as other Chinamen violating the Chinese-exclusion act.

Mr. BARHAM. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. BARHAM. This is a substitute for section 102?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. BARHAM. Now, if your amendment is adopted, it will let into the United States all of the Chinese that are not there under labor contracts, and you certainly do not want that. You certainly do not want this section stricken out. It would let them all into the United States. The section as amended by the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. KNOX] brings the Chinese in that island all under the exclusion act and prohibits them from coming to the United States from that island. If you add this to the section as amended by the chairman, then it would have force and effect, but you ought not to offer your amendment in lieu of that.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It did not seem to me from the reading of the amendment that the proposition I offer would have that effect; but it may have, and in order to obviate that I will offer it as a new provision, a new paragraph. My amendment was drawn for the section as it was before any amendment to it had been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as offered in that way.

Mr. KNOX. I did not hear the gentleman's remark. This amendment would leave all the Chinese and Japanese in the island who were there previous to that time. If the gentleman's amendment is to be offered, it should be offered as a new paragraph.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I offer it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. You say that all Chinese and Asiatics that have been brought into those islands under contracts shall depart in one year or be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the Chinese-exclusion act. What are the provisions of that act?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Oh, I have not time to go into that.

Mr. SNODGRASS. If those people have been brought to those islands——

Mr. DE ARMOND. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech in my time, nor could I read the provisions of the Chinese-exclusion act in twice five minutes.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has the floor.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The object of the amendment is to prevent the coming into the United States and to take away from Hawaii those Asiatic laborers who came in under contract—some twenty-five or thirty thousand of them. It is not enough that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] may exclude them from the United States proper. Whether it does it I can not tell, because I merely heard the amendment as it was read in the confusion of the House; but granting that it does, that, to my mind, is not sufficient. They ought not to remain in Hawaii. The contract system ought not to be maintained there, but they should be deported and should be dealt with in Hawaii, as well as in other parts of the United States, as are Chinese here against the provisions of our law, made, I suppose, for due reason and sufficient cause for the exclusion of the Chinese. I would like to have these contract laborers taken out of the Hawaiian Islands as well as prevented from coming to any other part of the United States. The amendment now pending, I think, will have that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not care for that much time. I only want a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It will supplement that which the gentleman from Massachusetts sought to accomplish by the amendment offered by him to the section. As I caught the reading of his amendment, I think that the two provisions are in harmony and not at all in conflict.

I think it is entirely right to prevent any and all of the Chinamen in the Hawaiian Islands from coming to any other part of the domain of the United States of America and that it is also proper and right and highly desirable to have all of the Chinese who are there under this contract-labor system taken hence as soon as possible. A year is a reasonable time in which to quit our domain without hardship to them.

Mr. BARHAM. The gentleman's amendment does not now propose to strike out the other, as I understand it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is a new proposition.

Mr. BARHAM. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported in its present form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following at the end of section 102:

"All Chinese and other Asiatics who came or were brought into Hawaii since August 12, 1898, under any contracts or contract whereby they bound themselves, or were or are bound to any term of service, shall depart therefrom and from the United States within one year from the date of the taking effect of this act, and any such person being in Hawaii or elsewhere in the United States after the expiration of said period shall be dealt with as if found within the United States in violation of the Chinese-exclusion act."

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, the people affected by this provision are poor people. They may not be able to get away at the end of the time mentioned; and I think if that amendment is adopted, there ought to be some provision requiring the persons who brought them into those islands under labor contracts to aid them to get away. If we are going to deal with them thus summarily, we ought to provide some way that they may be carried back.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is provided for in the Chinese-exclusion act.

Mr. SNODGRASS. That is what I wished to ask the gentleman from Missouri when I addressed an inquiry to him, with reference to the provisions of the exclusion act. Is that a provision of that act?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Then I withdraw all opposition to the amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. DE ARMOND was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment which will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 102 by adding:

"That there shall be a commissioner of labor, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed, whose duty shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of Hawaii useful information on subjects connected with labor, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity.

"It shall be his duty to make annual reports to the governor and legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, and also to the Department of Labor in the United States. The commissioner of labor is also specially charged to investigate the causes of and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employers and employees as they may occur, and which may tend to interfere with the welfare of the people of Hawaii, and to report thereon to the legislature of Hawaii and to the Department of Labor in the United States. The commissioner of labor shall annually make a report in writing to the governor and legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, as well as to the Department of Labor in the United States, of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the Department. He shall require such statements as may be prescribed by the Department of Labor in the United States, from all employers of labor, as to the number of laborers employed, the nationality of the laborers, the daily, weekly, and monthly wages paid, and such other information as the Department of Labor may require. Any failure to make such a statement by any person or corporation shall subject such person or corporation to a penalty of $100 for each and every refusal, to be collected and enforced by the government of the Territory of Hawaii in the courts of Hawaii, and to such other additional penalties as may be prescribed by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii. The legislature of Hawaii may add to the powers and duties of the commissioner of labor as herein prescribed, and may prescribe additional penalties."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide for the appointment of an official whose special duty it shall be to inquire into all questions relating to labor in the Hawaiian Islands, to collect and present statistics both to the governor of Hawaii, the legislature of Hawaii, and the Department of Labor at Washington. It provides that this commissioner shall be appointed by the President, for the reason that I deem it unwise that this appointment should be given to the governor of the Territory, or that the labor commissioner should be elected by the people there. The great danger to Republican institutions in those islands arises from their system of land tenure, which means centralization of land ownership in corporations of large capital, for the plantations are almost universally held and owned by corporations, and from the labor system that has prevailed there.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question there?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. COX. I could not determine from your amendment what term of office is fixed or the salary?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The term is fixed at four years. I have not provided for the salary. This commissioner should be appointed by the President of the United States, because we should see to it that a republican government is maintained there; and the danger to republican government largely arises from the system of labor which the governing class there seek to maintain. Reports are to be made not only to the governor and the legislature of those islands, but to the Department of Labor in the United States, so that his reports to us annually may present all the statistical information. Now, it has been the custom in almost every State in the Union to appoint such commissioners of labor and to organize such departments of labor.

They have done great and efficient work. We have a Commissioner of Labor of the United States and a United States Department of Labor, and the work of that department has been most beneficial. It seems to me that we can not properly organize the government of Hawaii unless we provide for a department whose special function it is to collect statistical information in relation to the labor conditions of that country and to present it to the local governing body and the supervising and controlling Government of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Does not the jurisdiction of our Labor Commissioner extend to-day to the Territories?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I do not so understand. I present this amendment after consultation with the Labor Commissioner to-day.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Wright. Does he approve it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are some additions made; but nothing at all that antagonizes his recommendation.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. McRAE. Can not he so modify his amendment as to impose these duties upon the commissioner of agriculture and forestry there?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The commissioner of agriculture and forestry there is elected by the people.

Mr. McRAE. If you require him to perform this duty, I think it will be a saving to the government.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not want this duty to be performed by any official who will be a representative of the very land system which is interested in maintaining and preserving this system of labor. I wish this commissioner to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. McRAE. The objection I see to it is that he has very little to do, and this other officer has very little to do, and these are two big salaries.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That can be taken in hand by the conferees and disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 102 by adding:

"That it is hereby declared to be the purpose of the United States to promote the increase of free white labor in the Territory of Hawaii and to discourage the employment of Asiatics, and to that end it is enacted that every corporation employing labor in Hawaii shall, within one year from the passage of this act, employ at least one-tenth of its laborers from citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, and other free white persons, and that such corporations shall increase the number of such laborers one-tenth annually, until at least three-fourths of their laborers shall be citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, or other free white persons. Any violation of this provision shall subject the corporation guilty of such violation to the forfeiture of its franchise and to such other penalties as may be prescribed by the legislature of Hawaii."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to gradually relieve Hawaii of the intolerable conditions arising from the employment of Asiatic labor. As it stands to-day these islands are almost entirely devoted to the production of sugar, a production which has been made vastly profitable by the markets which this country has afforded. Lands have risen to fabulous values. The prices received for their products and the profits made have been such as to warrant the employment of a higher class of laborers and a much more expensive system of labor.

Notwithstanding that fact, these corporations which own or control almost all the sugar lands and whose influence is potential in government have steadily encouraged Asiatic immigration to those islands, instead of endeavoring to increase white immigration to those islands. Their contention has been that the climate is unsuited to white labor. I have it from those who are informed as to the climate that it is not unsuited to white labor, and especially not unsuited to those white laborers who live in semitropical countries and semitropical climates, such as the Portuguese and Italians, who constitute a most useful portion of our population, whose children are educated in our schools, and who soon become, as citizens of a republican government, devoted to its institutions and its principles.

Now, the question is, How can we relieve these islands from the incubus that has been fastened upon them by a false labor system without injustice to existing rights and without the destruction of the business now conducted there? It is obvious that it must be gradually done. We can accomplish it by the control which the State has over the corporations which it creates. The Government can determine the class of labor which these corporations shall employ, and it can subject them to the penalty of forfeiture of their franchises if they violate the injunction of the law.

These corporations control all the sugar lands of Hawaii; and as that is the occupation which employs almost all the laborers in that country, by controlling the corporations in the employment of Asiatic labor you regulate the evil complained of.

Now, I provide in this amendment for the gradual increase in the white labor employed by these corporations. The amendment provides for the employment of one-tenth within the first year and an increase of one-tenth every year, until at least three-quarters of the employees of these corporations shall be citizens of the United States, which includes white and black citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, which includes the Kanakas and other white people, such as Italians and Portuguese, who can migrate to these islands, and thus gradually three-quarters of the now Asiatic population of these islands will increase by the addition of such persons, white or black, as are now citizens of the United States and by the immigration of laborers of the white race who are accustomed to a semitropical climate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Just for a question.

Mr. COX. Why do you exclude the negro there?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not.

Mr. COX. You say free white people.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No, I do not; I say citizens of the United States, citizens of the Territory of Hawaii and other free white persons. Now, citizens of the United States includes the negroes that are in the United States.

Mr. COX. Well, put my nigger in, and that is all I want. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Negroes of the United States can go to these islands. The plan which I advocate will not work any violent change in the existing system of labor, nor will it operate in the end to the disadvantage of the capital employed there. I am as anxious as anyone to avoid that. The process is merely one which reaches out for corporations which are creatures of the State and whose franchises are subject to the control of the State. It exercises a reasonable control over their employment of labor, to the advantage of the Government and to the advantage of the republican institutions.

Nor will it work an injustice to the Asiatic labor now employed there. The change will be gradual; and as these islands grow in business, as they are bound to do, it is probable that the Asiatic laborers now employed there and displaced by the gradual system which this amendment provides for will be absorbed by new enterprises, or will be glad to return to their homes with the accumulations which most of them acquire.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I have only one word to say in regard to this amendment, and that is, I trust that it will not prevail. The labor problem in Hawaii is a very difficult one and a very uncertain one, and what the future result is going to be there no one can foresee. The hope is, and the best hope is, that as these valuable lands which are now leased on long terms of years expire, and as they become a part of the public domain, inasmuch as under this bill no future leases but for a short term can be made except by an act of Congress, it is the hope that these lands will be taken, not by men who my friend says work for corporations, but that they will be taken by individuals who go to Hawaii in good faith to take these lands as homesteaders.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman has reference to the crown lands.

Mr. KNOX. I refer to all public lands. This is the best hope for Hawaii. Now, the great corporations that are there, which own the great sugar plantations and great rice fields, I do not believe with reference to them that any Americans are going there to work in the rice fields. I do not believe that citizens of the United States, the men who have the enterprise to-day, who go to Alaska, are going to Hawaii to work on a sugar plantation.

I believe the best hope for the Asiatics, the Japanese, and the Chinese is that they may acquire sufficient of their own means to buy these lands and own small plantations and have families there. I do not believe in opening the door and saying that these Chinese and Japanese shall ever be citizens of the United States; and I do not believe that anyone will ever work in the rice fields in Hawaii or in a tropical country unless he be a Chinaman or a Japanese or some native of a tropical country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Are there any rice fields in Hawaii?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. How extensive?

Mr. KNOX. I do not know, but the report will give you the information.

Mr. HITT. It is the third export of the island.

Mr. FINLEY. I think it is the second industry in the island.

Mr. KNOX. Yes; I think it is the second. These great products will never be produced by American workmen.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NEWLANDS) there were 34 ayes and 77 noes.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 97, insert two new sections, numbered 104 and 105, as follows:

"SEC. 104. That the laws of Hawaii relating to the establishment and conduct of any postal savings bank or institution are hereby abolished. And the Secretary of the Treasury, in the execution of the agreement of the United States as expressed in an act entitled 'A joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States,' approved July 7, 1898, shall pay the amounts on deposit in Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank to the persons entitled thereto, according to their respective rights, and he shall make all needful orders, rules, and regulations for paying such persons and for notifying such persons to present their demands for payment. So much money as is necessary to pay said demands is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available on and after the 1st day of July, 1900, when such payments shall begin, and none of said demands shall bear interest after said date and no deposit shall be made in said bank after said date. Said demands of such persons shall be certified to by the chief executive of Hawaii as being genuine and due to the persons presenting the same, and his certificate shall be sealed with the official seal of the Territory and countersigned by its secretary, and shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall draw his warrant for the amount due upon the Treasurer of the United States, and when the same are so paid no further liabilities shall exist in respect of the same against the Government of the United States or of Hawaii.

"SEC. 105. That any money of the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank that shall remain unpaid to the persons entitled thereto on the 1st day of July, 1900, and any assets of said bank, shall be turned over by the government of Hawaii to the Treasurer of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause an account to be started, as of said date, between such government of Hawaii and the United States in respect to said Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply carries out the provisions of the annexation resolution for closing up the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank. It is in the exact language recommended by the commission and adopted by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I move to add as a new section the paragraph which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 105. Nothing in this act shall be construed, taken, or held to imply a pledge or promise that the Territory of Hawaii will at any future time be admitted as a State or attached to any State.

Mr. KNOX. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the number of eligible voters in the republic of Hawaii to-day is 2,800. If this bill should become a law now, there would be to-morrow 15,000 such voters. I submit that this is rather a sudden absorption of the privileges and responsibilities of American citizenship. I submit, furthermore, that the committee itself feels precisely in the same way in regard to this matter; for I wish to read a clause in their report in regard to the qualifications of voters for senators, being a property qualification which I do not approve. The committee say:

The amendment striking out all property qualifications for electors of senators was made on account of great opposition made to this provision, both in the committee and by other Representatives. It appeared that such a qualification had heretofore existed in Hawaii, and this fact had been salutary, and it is hoped—

A hope in which "the gentleman from Connecticut" most heartily joins—and it is hoped that this amendment will not unfavorably affect either the character of so important a body as the senate of Hawaii or ever be the means of vicious legislation.

I regret that this legislation should be framed in so hasty and inconsiderate a manner that the committee itself feels called upon to apologize when the bill is here for the organization of this Territory.

No harm whatever can come from the passage of the amendment I have just offered. It commits Congress to nothing. It simply says that this bill and the admission of this Territory shall not be taken or construed as a pledge for the admission of the Territory to statehood either in the immediate or the distant future.

Mr. CANNON. Whether the amendment be adopted or not, is there anything in this bill which commits the Congress of the United States or the people of the country to admit this Territory to statehood?

Mr. HILL. I think there is, so far as the sentimental side of the question is concerned. The American people look upon the authorization and full organization of a Territory as the first step toward statehood. It has always been so construed; it always will be so construed. By the adoption of this amendment we shall simply put ourselves on record as declaring that this legislation is not adopted with that end in view.

Allow me a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted except by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asks unanimous consent to address the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would state in reply to the elegant remark of the chairman of the Committee on Territories that the amendment offered by me is the precise amendment which the junior Senator from the State of Massachusetts was reported in the papers to have stated that he would have offered if he had had an opportunity.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 2, 1900:

H. R. 541. An act granting a pension to Ellen Norwood;

H. R. 589. An act granting a pension to Louisa S. Wilson;

H. R. 1989. An act granting a pension to Marie Wiersang;

H. R. 2792. An act granting a pension to Peter Cummings;

H. R. 4854. An act granting a pension to James L. Whidden;

H. R. 5229. An act granting a pension to Sarah Potter;

H. R. 5949. An act granting a pension to Frederick Weber;

GOVERNMENT FOR HAWAII.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, there are two opinions as to the legal status of Territories of the United States. One is that under the Constitution every Territory is necessarily in process of formation for statehood. The other is that this view is a mere dictum of a court and is not law.

Now, let us take both sides of that proposition. If the announcement of the court be a decision, then the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] would place upon the statute books an unconstitutional pronouncement. If, upon the other hand, the contention of the other side is correct and the announcement of the court be mere obiter dictum and it be not true that a Territory is necessarily a country in process of formation for statehood, then the gentleman's amendment is unnecessary.

Now, why is it unnecessary? For two reasons: First, if Congress desires to prevent Hawaii from becoming a State it has a very easy method of preventing it, and that is simply never to vote to make Hawaii a State. And then there is another reason why it is unnecessary. Even if this Congress could bind all successive Congresses, as far as any Congress can possibly bind another, by an utterance to the effect that Hawaii should never become a State, that act of this Congress could be repealed by the very next Congress, or the very next Congress after that, if that Congress chose. Therefore I think I agree with the gentleman who is chairman of the committee, without repeating the language of my old friend Mr. Walker, that this thing is "demnition nonsense," either because it is unconstitutional or else because it is unnecessary. [Applause.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Let us have the reading of the amendment again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RIDGELY. I move to amend by striking out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order, this being an amendment to an amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment of Mr. HILL was rejected.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In place of section 103 of the bill insert a new section, to be numbered 105, and to read as follows:
"SEC. 105. This act shall take effect sixty days from and after the date of the approval thereof, excepting only as to section 82, relating to appropriations, which shall take effect upon such approval."

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the full time apportioned to me, but I wish at this stage of our proceedings to call the attention of members here to the fact that while we are claiming that these new possessions are to give us an outlet for our labor element, we have by our action here refused the very conservative provision offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], providing that the people in Hawaii employing labor shall gradually give preference to our people by requiring that at least 10 per cent of their employees shall be citizens, adding to this 10 per cent each year until all employees are citizens, allowing them to take the colored people from this country to displace the Asiatics if they so desire.

In opposition to this, the chairman of this committee calls attention to the fact that the peculiar conditions and kinds of work in that country may demand the employment of the Asiatics, who by the bill are denied the right of citizenship. I simply call attention to the fact that we, by our action here, are admitting that we at least hold it to be a matter of grave doubt whether we have any laborers that are adapted to the chief industries of our new possessions.

Another thing I earnestly condemn. We have just passed an amendment to this bill which directly destroys the postal savings bank that the government of Hawaii had established without offering anything in its place. Thus we drive all deposits to private banks, which too often fail. We are really carrying those people backward instead of forward in this, while we boast of our superior civilization.

I will not take up any more time now, but I will extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is still pending.

Mr. MCRAE. I hope the gentleman will modify that by also excepting section 10 and let that go into operation at once.

Mr. KNOX. We could not do that.

The amendment of Mr. KNOX was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the chairman of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

1. Insert on page 83, after section 76, a new section, to read as follows:
"There shall be a commissioner of labor, whose duty it shall be to collect, assort, arrange, and present in annual reports to the governor and to the legislature and to the Department of Labor of the United States statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the Territory, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and to all such other subjects as the legislature may by law direct. The said commissioner is specially charged to ascertain, at as early a date as possible and as often thereafter as such information may be required, the highest, lowest, and average number of employees engaged in the various industries in the Territory, to be classified as to nativity, sex, hours of labor, and conditions of employment, and to report the same to the United States Commissioner of Labor."
2. Insert in section 80, on page 85, line 2, after the word "forestry," the words "commissioner of labor."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] asks unanimous consent to return to the section referred to in his amendment for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is general in its provisions, and I was induced to say that I would not object to it, because it was drawn by the Commissioner of Labor, Mr. Wright, whom we all know to be an able man, and who has thoroughly investigated these questions, and is better able to judge of what is necessary and proper than I am. Therefore I agreed to offer no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HITT. Does this provide any salary for the commissioner?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. Inasmuch as one section of the bill has been stricken out, I ask unanimous consent that the sections may be renumbered, to make them consecutive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will perform that duty.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this whole House bill is an amendment to the Senate bill, striking out the enacting clause and inserting the bill that we have been considering, I move that this amendment be now adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Committee on Territories, as amended, be agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. If this motion prevails, does it prevent the voting in the House upon amendments to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That question will arise in the House and there be disposed of.

Mr. BARTLETT. We should like to know before we vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no authority to express an opinion upon what will arise in the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia still holds the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Excuse me.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether this is a request for unanimous consent or whether it is a motion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a motion in order.

Mr. KNOX. It is the usual motion that is made in such cases.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not proposing to object to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Pending that, I would like to ask the privilege of submitting an amendment to the last section, or an amendment to the amendment that the Committee on Territories proposed a moment ago.

Mr. KNOX. What is it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is a change from thirty to sixty days in the time at which the bill should take effect.

Mr. KNOX. I am informed by the Department that the time we have already fixed for this bill to take effect is too short. It takes—I do not know how long for the bill to get to San Francisco, and we have no cable to Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am sorry for that, as there are some matters on which it ought to take effect early.

Mr. KNOX. We have provided that some provisions take effect at once.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does that include section 10—the labor provision?

Mr. KNOX. No; it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken; and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendment to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 222, and had directed him to report the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, with the recommendation that the bill as thus amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, since the parliamentary status of the bill is such that no amendment can be voted upon separately, and the only opportunity to offer an amendment is by a motion to recommit to the Committee on Territories, I desire to offer such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri submits a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Territories with instructions to strike out of page 71, line 7, after the word "allowed," the words "nor shall saloons for the sale of intoxicating liquors be allowed," and that the bill be reported back forthwith.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose that motion is adopted. I desire to know whether it would be the duty of the gentleman in charge of the bill at once on its adoption to report back the bill as instructed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in reply to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, that it has been held repeatedly that the chairman of the committee who reports the bill, if this motion should prevail, should report it back forthwith, without leaving his seat or consulting his committee; and the Chair will further state that in the recollection of the Chair, on a motion made by the gentleman from Illinois who makes the parliamentary inquiry, that ruling was made. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FINLEY. For a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether or not unanimous consent is necessary on that motion?

The SPEAKER. On this motion; not at all. It is a privilege the gentleman has. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 83.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey and Mr. BARTHOLDT. The yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Eighteen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; the yeas and nays are refused. The noes have it, and the motion is lost. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KLEBERG and others. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 28.

Mr. KLEBERG. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twelve gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; the yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10911) to authorize the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to build and maintain a railway bridge across Red River, at or near the town of Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read at length.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BREAZEALE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 60, which simply provides for a subdivision of the northern district of Georgia, in order that the court may be held at a more central point for carrying on the business. It is unanimously reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 60) to create the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia for judicial purposes and to fix the time and place for holding court therein.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the counties of Dade, Walker, Catoosa, Whitfield, Murray, Chattooga, Gordon, Floyd, Bartow, Polk, Paulding, Haralson, and Carroll, in the State of Georgia, shall constitute the northwestern division of the northern judicial district of Georgia, and a term of the circuit and district courts for said district shall be held in said division hereby created at the city of Rome on the third Monday of May and the third Monday of November of each year. Each of said terms to continue two weeks or longer, if necessary, to dispose of the business at any time pending in said court.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits which shall hereafter be brought against a defendant or defendants who reside in said northwestern division of said district shall be brought in said northwestern division; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of said district, such suit may be brought in either division of said district in which any defendant or defendants reside, and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act issued in either of the divisions of the northern district of Georgia may be served and executed in either or all of the divisions.

SEC. 3. That all crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States hereafter committed within the counties comprising the northwestern division of said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined at the terms of the circuit and district courts herein provided for: Provided, however, That all such crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said northern district and the marshal of said district shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside and maintain an office at the city of Rome, each of whom, in the absence of the clerks and marshal, shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of his principal within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the court for which they shall be respectively appointed, and they may be removed by such court at pleasure; and the clerk and marshal shall be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies.

SEC. 5. That all the grand jurors and all jurors for the trial of civil and criminal courts in the division hereby created shall be selected from citizens residing in the division created by this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 1, from lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out the following: "Each of said terms to continue two weeks or longer, if necessary to dispose of the business at any time pending in said court" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for the holding of said courts free of expense to the Government of the United States."

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "Hereafter."

Page 2, strike out all of lines 15, 16, 17, and 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "that all prosecutions begun and pending at the taking effect of this act shall be proceeded with and finally determined as if this act were not passed."

Page 2, line 20, strike out the words "and the marshal of said district."

Page 2, line 23, strike out the words "and marshal."

Page 3, from lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out the following: "and the clerk and marshal shall be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies."

Page 3, line 7, strike out the word "courts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "causes."

Page 3, after line 9, insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect from and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1900, and all acts and parts of acts so far as inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if this bill makes any extra charge on the Treasury?

Mr. FLEMING. It does not.

Mr. PAYNE. And is it the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. FLEMING. It is; and it creates no additional charge on the Treasury. The city of Rome furnishes the building free.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLEMING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House to order a reprint of the Senate Document 239, second session Fifty-fifth Congress, there being a bill now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, and the document is exhausted. I have submitted this to the chairman and the Committee on Printing, and they say they have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the reprint of Senate Document No. 229, second session Fifty-fifth Congress. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair will submit a message from the President of the United States.

The message from the President of the United States was read, as follows, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the act of Congress approved December 28, 1892, a copy of which is annexed, the Attorney-General of the United States "is authorized and directed to bring suit in the Court of Claims against La Abra Silver Mining Company, its successors and assigns, and all persons making any claim to the award or any part thereof in this act mentioned, to determine whether the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission in respect to the claim of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company was obtained, as to the whole sum included therein or as to any part thereof, by fraud effectuated by means of false swearing or other false and fraudulent practices on the part of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company, or its agents, attorneys, or assigns; and, in case it be so determined, to bar and foreclose all claim in law or equity on the part of said La Abra Silver Mining Company, its legal representatives or assigns, to the money, or any such part thereof, received from the Republic of Mexico for or on account of such award."

In pursuance of the provisions and powers of this act, the Attorney-General did, on behalf of the United States, bring suit in the Court of Claims against La Abra Silver Mining Company et al.; and on June 24, 1897, that court decided that the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission in favor of said La Abra Silver Mining Company was obtained by fraud, and a decree was rendered barring and foreclosing all claim on the part of said company, its agents, attorneys, or assigns, to the money received from the Republic of Mexico on account of said award. A copy of this decision is herewith transmitted.

The Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, having affirmed in full the decision of the Court of Claims, the Secretary of State, in accordance with section 4 of the act referred to and the judicial proceedings above recited, and acting under my direction, on March 28, 1900, turned over to the ambassador of the Republic of Mexico at Washington the balance, amounting to $403,030.08, remaining under the control of the Department of State of the sum paid by the Government of Mexico on account of La Abra award.

I transmit a copy of the Secretary of State's note of transmittal, as well as a translation of the ambassador's cordial note of acknowledgment.

It affords me pleasure to communicate to Congress the accomplishment of this act of equity and good faith toward a friendly Republic.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a change of reference of two bills: H. R. 10223, for improvement of navy-yard bridge at Washington, D. C., and H. R. 10222, providing for the erection of engine house and the purchase of a chemical engine at Congress Heights, D. C., from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations. Without objection, this change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of House bill 64, known as the shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks for a reprint of House bill 64. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us have the title of the bill read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman calls for the regular order, and to adjourn is not the regular order. It is the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moved to adjourn, and the Chair submitted some papers upon the Speaker's table. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois must be put by the Chair.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—52 ayes and 38 noes.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Clinch River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the case of the brig Pilgrim, John Thissel, master, against the United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of J. Q. Roberts, administrator of estate of Henry M. Roberts, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 7, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I believe the practice of dispensing with the reading of the Journal is a very pernicious one. I think in emergencies, where there is any reason why the time of the Senate should not be taken in this way, the reading may be dispensed with, but ordinarily the Senate ought to know, and it is the only time the Senate has any means of knowing, what is the official record of the proceedings of the day before. I hope the practice of dispensing with the reading will not be indulged in to the extent it has been done heretofore. I shall not object at this time, but hereafter I shall object to dispensing with the reading of the Journal unless there is some reason for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

PRINTING AND BINDING, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the chief of the Division of Stationery, Printing, and Blanks, in relation to the necessity for an additional appropriation of $60,000 for printing and binding for the Treasury Department for the remainder of the current fiscal year; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AGES OF EMPLOYEES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 16th ultimo, a statement showing by specified ages the number of regular employees in the War Department, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army inclosing draft of a bill conferring upon acting assistant surgeons of the Army the same rights and privileges as regards leaves of absence as commissioned officers of the Army; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 60) to create the northwestern division of the northen district of Georgia for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein; and

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3982) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands to the endowment, support, and maintenance of schools or departments of mining and metallurgy in the several States and Territories in connection with the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon.

I ask that 500 copies in addition to the usual number of the bill and report be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that a thousand extra copies be printed. There will be a great demand for it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well; let 1,000 copies be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina requests that 1,000 additional copies of the bill and report be printed for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1982) for the erection of a public building at Allentown, Pa., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3208) for the erection of a public building at Green Bay, Wis., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Rules, reported an amendment proposing an appropriation of $1,000 to pay Horace C. Reed for preparing an edition of the Senate Manual, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On March 16 I reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (S. 3211) to authorize the construction of an addition to the public building at Hartford, Conn., and submitted a report thereon. I now beg leave to submit a supplemental report, and I move that it be printed as part 2, to accompany the report already made by me.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4052) to correct the military record of Peter Philip Jackson Anderson, alias Philip Jackson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 4053) to abolish all duties on printing paper suitable for books and newspapers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4063) for the relief of William Lockhart;
A bill (S. 4064) for the relief of R. D. Alexander; and
A bill (S. 4065) for the relief of Columbus Roberts.

Mr. DEPEW introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4066) for the relief of Thomas Stack; and
A bill (S. 4067) for the relief of Frank G. Osborn (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 4068) for the relief of Francis E. Berler; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4069) granting a pension to Harriet Osgood Clendenin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 4070) granting a pension to Helen C. Wallace; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4071) for the relief of the estate of August Heberlein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4072) to amend sections 190 and 5498 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENNEY introduced a bill (S. 4073) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Edwards, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4074) granting a pension to Georgianna McNatt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEITFELD introduced a bill (S. 4075) to amend an act to prohibit the passage of special or local laws in the Territories, to limit the Territorial indebtedness, and so forth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $38,000 for topographical and geological surveys by the United States Geological Survey on the islands of Porto Rico and Hawaii, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Coast and Insular Survey, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,531,140.51 for the extension of the jetty at the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon and Washington, including repairs and additions to the wharves, approaches, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRAVEL PAY AND ALLOWANCES.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That 1,500 copies of Senate Report, No. 813, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, on the bill (S. 3616) to authorize the payment of traveling allowances to enlisted men of the regular and volunteer forces when discharged by order of the Secretary of War and stated by him as entitled to travel pay, be printed for the use of the Senate.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF HISTORY AND ART.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to insert certain cuts and accompanying text in the publication of Franklin Webster Smith praying an appropriation of land for a site for a national gallery of history and art and for aid in the establishment thereof in the city of Washington, D. C., the petition for which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed, on the 12th day of February, 1900.

JORGE CRUZ.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I submit a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the action of the Treasury Department in the case of Jorge Cruz, a resident of Porto Rico, brought to New York under contract to labor in the United States, together with all copies of all correspondence in the case; and that he be further directed to inform the Senate what steps, if any, have been taken to prosecute, for violating the alien contract labor law, the person, firm, or corporation entering into contract with said Cruz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution, I think, recites that this man was brought under a contract to labor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing to change the resolution so as to let it state that he was alleged or charged to have been brought here under contract.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it read "alleged to have been brought." The Senate does not know the fact that he was brought. The Senator from Arkansas may know it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I agree to the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Porto Rico" insert the words "alleged to have been."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SANTEE SIOUX INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate how many acres were originally contained in the reservation set apart for the Santee Sioux Indians under and by virtue of Article III of the treaty of August 5, 1851, as modified by the Senate resolution in executive session June 23, 1851, and also Senate resolution of June 22, 1860; how many acres of said reservation were actually sold under the act of March 3, 1863, at what price per acre the same was sold, and if any, and what part thereof, was sold higher than $1.25 per acre; if any portion of said reservation is left unsold and the number of acres thereof, and whether the proceeds of the portion sold thereof is recognized as belonging to the Indians; and he is directed to furnish an itemized account of the proceeds of the sale of said lands each year from the passage of the act of March 3, 1863, to the present time; how the proceeds were expended to June 5, 1870, for the four bands of Indians, namely, the Medawakanton, the Wahpakoota, the Sisseton, and the Wahpeton, now confederated and known as the Santee Sioux Indians, and what proportion the Santee Sioux Indians would have if recognized under their former tribal names; the purpose or purposes for which said money or moneys were expended since June 15, 1870, and if any sum or sums derived from the sale of any said lands were used to fulfill treaty obligation; and if so, to specify the same and what sum each of said tribes would be entitled from the proceeds of said lands if the act of June 15, 1870, had not been passed and the lands had been sold at $1.25 per acre, according to section 3 of the act of March 3, 1863.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN IOWA.

Mr. GEAR. I submit, by request, a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Iowa between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled Ebenezer H. Swinney and others against The United States, No. 18213, each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884; and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others against The United States, No. 16345.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the request concerning the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa requests present consideration.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I wish to say that that is one of the Spalding resolutions that has been handed to the Senators from each State in a typewritten copy asking presentation by them respecting the State represented by different Senators, and that one has been introduced for all the States, which was referred to the Post-Office Committee, and I suggest the reference of this resolution to the Post-Office Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the resolution is referred, I should like to have it amended so as to take in the entire United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] does contemplate a return from the Postmaster-General of the reports as to fourth-class postmasters throughout the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; then I have no objection to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of New York between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled Bryant S. Palmer and others against The United States, No. 18280, each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884; and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers and in circular form, No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others against The United States, No. 16345.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 1475) to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, and making appropriation therefor.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any teacher in the public schools of the District has been censured or taken to task by a superior officer on account of the testimony given by such teacher during the recent investigation of the public schools.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 60) to create the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia for judicial purposes and to fix the time and place for holding court therein was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 10311) to authorize the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to build and maintain a railway bridge across Red River at or near the town of Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, State of Louisiana, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to it. I hope it may be reported back to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. THURSTON. The morning business being concluded, I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks consent to proceed to the consideration of House bill 7433. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object, and ask the Chair to lay the resolution with reference to the vacant seat from Pennsylvania before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, under the unanimous agreement.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 23, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make an appeal to the Senator from Nebraska. There is a bill on the Calendar in regard to a bridge in the State of Mississippi, and it is peculiarly important that the bill should be passed at once. There is no objection to it. The matter has been tied up in the courts, and it has been very inconvenient to a large number of people. The Committee on Commerce has unanimously reported the bill, and I should like very much if the Senator would yield to me and let me have the bill passed. It will not take exceeding five minutes at the outside.

Mr. THURSTON. I have no objection to that. I believe we can finish the Indian appropriation bill in an hour.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will allow me to have that bill passed, I will then help him to get the appropriation bill through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriation bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. THURSTON. I understand that. I ask that the resolution concerning Mr. Quay be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to that if anyone is ready to speak on the Pennsylvania resolution. I had supposed some Senator would be ready to speak after the notice which I gave the other day, and that Senators who intended to speak might properly be asked to be ready and not to longer delay the Senate in the consideration of this resolution. I will ask the Senator from Michigan if he is ready to proceed this morning?

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am not, and I do not know of anyone who is prepared this morning to proceed. We shall be ready next week, probably on Monday, to go on with the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. If no one desires to speak at this time, I certainly shall not object to having the resolution go over until Monday morning, but I do insist that Senators who are ready to speak shall go on at that time, and I also insist that Senators who intend to speak shall get ready to submit their views to the Senate on that question, and some time next week, possibly on Monday, I shall ask to have a day fixed when the Senate will vote upon the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

PEARL RIVER (MISSISSIPPI) BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8063) to legalize and maintain the iron bridge across Pearl River at Rockport, Miss.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

LANDS AT YANKTON AGENCY, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2493) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for land in certain cases. It is a very short bill, and it will take but a moment.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the bill reported from a committee?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to issue patents to Thomas H. Aungie, Matilda Lyman, and Harriet L. Aungie, members of the Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians, for not to exceed 1 acre of land each, so as to embrace their houses, near the agency buildings at Yankton Agency, S. Dak., but not to embrace any buildings owned by the Government, upon payment by each of those persons of the sum of $3.75.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2924) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 11, page 1, after the word "apparatus," to strike out the word "elevators;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Colorado Springs and State of Colorado, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 15 to 21, inclusive, in the following words:

No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Colorado shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER (LOUISIANA) BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10311) to authorize the Shreveport and Red River Valley Railway Company to build and maintain a railway bridge across Red River at or near the town of Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, State of Louisiana, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. There is quite an emergency in reference to that bill, and I ask that it may be immediately put upon its passage.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 4,500 copies of the report transmitted by the Secretary of State of the commissioner for the United States on the International Prison Commission on "crimes, misdemeanors, and penalties" in the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2679) declaring certain trestles of the Washington County Railroad Company to be lawful structures.

The message further announced that the House had passed, with amendments, the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals for the calendar year 1898, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 8,000 copies of any matter furnished by the Director of the Bureau of American Ethnology relating to researches and discoveries connected with the study of the American aborigines, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7433) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, when, on yesterday, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], on page 42, was under consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment has been read, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Arkansas if he will not withdraw his amendment? The subject of commissions for town sites in the Creek and Cherokee nations was considered by the committee, and provided for on page 42, in the proviso commencing in line 15, and running on to page 43. That proviso represents the opinion of the committee, as I understood it at the time, but during my absence there was a delegation here from the Indian Territory who wanted to change it. I have had no opportunity to examine the question. I am not satisfied that the plan now proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas is preferable to the one which was agreed upon by the committee when the bill was reported; and as the whole subject-matter is in the bill and will go before the committee of conference, where a change could be made if it were found desirable. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not press his amendment at this time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no disposition to press this amendment, especially if the Senator from Connecticut has any doubt about the propriety of it. At the time it was proposed, as just stated by the Senator from Connecticut, he was absent from the city, which I then very much regretted. That there is an evil existing in the Indian Territory at this time which ought to be corrected there can be no doubt. A subcommittee was appointed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate the complaints made about the management of the town-site commissioners in the Indian Territory. A number of complaints had come in public and private ways to me, and I presented a resolution to the Senate, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into those complaints. A subcommittee was appointed and directed to take this matter up.

After an investigation made by the subcommittee, most of the members of the committee were satisfied that there should be something done, and the amendment offered by me was prepared and sent to the Secretary of the Interior for his opinion. I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending the adoption of the amendment, which I will, without objection, place in the RECORD for the information of Senators who are interested in the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish the Senator would also place in the RECORD the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I have not yet had an opportunity to read. I believe he has written a letter on the subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is another letter from the Department, which I will also ask to have inserted in the RECORD, showing the progress of the work done by the town-site commissioners, the amount of work done, and the expense. It shows that in the twelve months in which this work has been in progress, with one town-site commission in the Chickasaw Nation and one in the Choctaw Nation, there have been three town sites surveyed in the Choctaw Nation and two surveyed in the Chickasaw Nation.

From the statements of the witnesses who were before the committee, I think there are from 40 to 50 towns in each of these nations, which would seem to indicate that one commission can not possibly make all the surveys for a great many years to come.

There is another consideration which we thought ought to have some influence in this matter, and that was the advantage which one town would get in being surveyed now, opened for settlement, and titles thereby being conveyed to persons who were residents of that town, in comparison with other towns where a survey can not take place under the present management for five or ten years to come. It would be unfair in its operation; it would operate inequitably and unjustly.

I will place in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, first, the letter of the Secretary of the Interior recommending the adoption of the amendment proposed by me; then the letter of transmittal of the Secretary, together with the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which shows the work done by the town-site commissions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letters referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 23, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of even date, inclosing a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill (page 42) and asking my opinion as to the advisability of incorporating the same in the bill.

In reply I have to say that the amendment has my entire approval, and I trust it will receive favorable action on the part of the Senate and be incorporated in the bill. The amendment is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES K. JONES,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 27, 1900.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 17th instant, requesting a statement of the amount of money it has cost to survey and appraise each of the towns surveyed and appraised by town-site commissions in the Indian Territory, the amount of the sale of lots in each case, the total amount of money expended by the Department for this purpose, the number of surveys and appraisements completed, and the condition of the work in the other towns where not completed, you are advised that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was directed to make report concerning the inquiries above set forth, and I am now in receipt of his report, dated the 26th instant, which gives the information desired.

I have the honor to inclose a copy of said report herewith.

Respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES K. JONES,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 26, 1900

SIR: I am in receipt, by Department reference of March 17, 1900, for report, of a communication dated March 17, 1900, from Hon. JAMES K. JONES, in which he requests to be advised as soon as possible of "the amount of money it has cost to survey and appraise each of the towns which have been appraised and surveyed by town-site commissioners in the Indian Territory, and what the sale of lots under such appraisement in each case has amounted to; the total amount of money expended by your Department under this head, and the number of surveys and appraisements completed, and the condition of the work in other towns where not completed."

In reply, I have the honor to report that from the records on file in this office, it can not be definitely ascertained what it has cost to survey, plat, appraise, and sell the lots in any particular town in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

However, from an examination of the quarterly cash accounts and the weekly reports rendered by Dr. Sterrett, the disbursing officer of the Choctaw town-site commission, it is ascertained that the expenses of this commission from March 13 to May 23, 1899, was approximately $321.80. This covers the period from the time Dr. Sterrett entered on duty, March 13, 1899, to the date the commission commenced the survey of the town of Sterrett, which was about May 23, 1899, and includes Dr. Sterrett's salary and the expenses incurred by him while he was in Washington receiving instructions relative to town-site matters, which covered the period from March 13 to April 6, 1899, and also the expenses of the commission while at Muscogee, Ind. T., preparing, in connection with the Chickasaw and Muscogee town-site commissions, forms from which to have record books, blanks, etc., printed. The commission was engaged in this work from April 17 to May 23, 1899.

The Choctaw town-site commission commenced work at Sterrett, Choctaw Nation, about May 24, 1899, and completed its duties at said town about September 2, 1899, and the plat of said town prepared by said commission was approved by the Department August 28, 1899.

The total expense incurred by this commission in surveying, platting, appraising, and selling the lots in the town of Sterrett was, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission, approximately $3,059.48. In the items of expense above mentioned is also probably included the cost of office furniture, surveyors' instruments, drafting material, etc. The lots in the town of Sterrett sold for an aggregate of $19,188.76.

This commission commenced the survey of Atoka, Choctaw Nation, about September 3, 1899, and completed the survey and platting of said town of Atoka about November 6, 1899, at an aggregate expense of about $1,841.17, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission on file in this office. The plat of Atoka prepared by this commission was approved by the Department February 23, 1900. The lots in said town, so far as this office is advised, have not yet been appraised and sold.

This commission commenced the survey of South McAlester November 7, 1899, and its expenditures since said date up to and including March 17, 1900, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission, have been, approximately, $4,638.47. It is expected that the plat of South McAlester now being prepared by said commission will be received in this office by May 1, 1900. Certain sundry expenses, such as typewriter, stationery, etc., incurred by this commission have been paid through the Treasury Department, amounting in all to the sum of $139.30.

The expenses of the Chickasaw town-site commission from March 25, 1899, the date Samuel N. Johnson, chairman of the commission, entered on duty, to about May 27, 1899, the approximate date said commission commenced work at Colbert, Chickasaw Nation, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of Mr. Johnson, the disbursing officer of the commission, were about $857.41. This item of expense seems to include Mr. Johnson's salary and expenses while in Washington receiving instructions relative to his duties, and the salaries of the commissioners and expenses incurred by them while at Muscogee, Ind. T., which was approximately from March 13 to May 26, 1899. During this time said commission was assisting the Choctaw and Muscogee town-site commissions in the matter of preparing forms from which to have record books, blanks, etc., printed.

The commission commenced the survey of Colbert, Chickasaw Nation, about May 27, 1899, and completed its duties there about August 31, 1899. The aggregate expense incurred by this commission in surveying, platting, appraising, and selling the lots in the town of Colbert, Chickasaw Nation, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission on file in this office was approximately $3,472.80.

There is also probably included in the items of expense above mentioned the cost of office furniture, surveyor's instruments, drafting material, etc. The plat of Colbert prepared by this commission was approved by the Department August 14, 1899. The lots in Colbert, Chickasaw Nation, were sold for an aggregate of $5,072.25.

This commission commenced work at Ardmore, Chickasaw Nation, September 1, 1899. The aggregate expense incurred by it from said date up to and including March 10, 1900, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission on file in this office, is approximately $7,121.77. It is expected that the plat of Ardmore will be received in this office by May 1, 1900. Certain sundry expenses of this commission, such as typewriter, stationery, etc., were paid through the Treasury Department, amounting in the aggregate to $117.77.

The expense of the Muscogee town-site commission from April 6, 1899, the date the chairman, Mr. D. W. Tuttle, entered on duty, up to and including March 17, 1900, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports of the disbursing officer of the commission on file in this office, has been approximately $11,667.33.

In the expenditure above mentioned there is included Mr. Tuttle's salary and expenses while in Washington receiving instructions relative to his duties, and that of the commission while assisting the other commissions in the preparation of forms from which to have record books, blanks, etc., printed.

However, it can not be ascertained from the quarterly cash accounts and weekly reports rendered by the disbursing officer of the commission the amount of such expenses. One typewriter for the use of this commission, at a cost of $85, was paid for through the Treasury Department. It is expected that the plat of Muscogee, prepared by this commission, will be received in this office not later than April 1, 1900.

The commission is now engaged in appraising the town of Muscogee, Creek

Nation, and it is thought that such appraisement will have been completed by May 1, 1900.

The expenses of the Wagoner town-site commission from August 8, 1899, to the date Mr. H. C. Linn, chairman of the commission, entered upon duty, up to and including December 31, 1899, as shown by the quarterly cash accounts of the disbursing officer of the commission, Mr. Linn, have been about $4,340.28.

The expense of this commission subsequent to December 31, 1899, can not be ascertained, for the reason that the disbursing officer has never rendered any weekly reports to the office, and his quarterly cash account for the present quarter will not be received until after the termination thereof, which is March 31, 1900.

The Wagoner town-site commission is now engaged in appraising the town lots of Wagoner, Creek Nation. The plat prepared by said commission has been received in this office and has been transmitted for departmental action. It is expected that the appraisement of the lots in Wagoner will be completed by about April 20, 1900.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the amount it has cost to survey, plat, appraise, and sell any particular town in the Choctaw or Chickasaw nation can not be definitely ascertained from the records on file in this office; that the Choctaw town-site commission has surveyed, platted, appraised, and sold the lots in one town in the Choctaw Nation, viz, Sterrett; that the plat of said town prepared by said commission was approved by the Department August 28, 1899; that the lots in said town sold for an aggregate of $19,188.76; that the approximate expenses incident to said work were $3,659.48; that said commission has surveyed and platted the town of Atoka, Choctaw Nation, at an aggregate approximate cost of $1,841.17; that, so far as this office is advised, the lots in said town of Atoka have not been appraised and sold; that the plat of said town of Atoka, prepared by said commission, was approved by the Department February 23, 1900; that said commission commenced the survey and plat of the town of South McAlester, Choctaw Nation, about November 7, 1899, and has been engaged in surveying and platting said town up to and including this date; that the cost of the work up to and including March 17, 1900, has been approximately $4,636.47; that it is expected the plat of said town, presumed to be in course of preparation by said commission, will be received in this office by May 1, 1900; that the Chickasaw town-site commission has surveyed, platted, appraised, and sold the lots in one town in the Chickasaw Nation, viz, Colbert; that the plat thereof prepared by said commission was approved by the Department August 14, 1899; that the lots in said town sold for an aggregate of $5,072.25; that the approximated cost of surveying, platting, appraising, and selling the lots in said town was $3,472.80; that said commission is now and has been since about September 1, 1899, engaged in surveying and platting the town of Ardmore, Chickasaw Nation; that the expense incurred by said commission since the date last above mentioned up to and including March 10, 1900, has been, approximately, $7,121.77; that it is expected the plat of said town now being prepared by said commission will be received in this office not later than May 1, 1900; that the Muscogee town-site commission is now, and has been since about May 20, 1899, engaged in surveying and platting the town of Muscogee, Creek Nation; that the total expense of this commission up to, and including March 17, 1900, has been approximately $11,667.33; that the plat of said town will probably be received in this office by April 1, 1900; that it is understood said commission is appraising the lots in said town; that said appraisement will probably be completed by May 1, 1900; that the Wagoner town-site commission has surveyed and platted the town of Wagoner, Creek Nation; that the plat prepared by said commission is now before the Department; that the total expense incurred by said commission from August 8, 1899, the date the chairman entered on duty up to and including December 31, 1899, has been approximately $4,340.28; that said commission is now engaged in appraising the lots in said town, and that it is expected such appraisement will be completed by April 20, 1900.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. With that statement and with the understanding which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] mentions, that this whole matter will be open in conference, I will withdraw the amendment from present consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is very possible there ought to be some different arrangement from that proposed in the bill, but I can hardly think it is necessary to have forty or fifty different town-site commissioners. It makes a great many officers. It would make 100 town-site commissioners, more or less. It seems to me the disposition of the matter can be arrived at in some way without the appointment of such a large body of officers.

I have no present conclusive impression on the subject, and therefore I do not want to have the amendment adopted. I am very glad the Senator has withdrawn it. I will give my careful attention to it afterwards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, I want to say that I think in all probability there may not be any pressing necessity for a town-site commission for every town. Still it does seem, when you look into the matter very carefully, as if it would be desirable to have such a commission for every town, so as to facilitate the work and have it completed as early as possible.

But the important matter carried by the amendment which I have proposed is the provision that the towns may, if they see fit, have surveys made at their own expense; and when so made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, the town-site commission may be then appointed and an appraisement at once take place.

The length of time which these officers would have to exercise their duties under these circumstances would be very brief; and whether there be a larger or a smaller number would cut but little figure if it would only take a short time to complete the work they had in hand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to make some inquiries about the town-site commissioners who are already out there. How are they getting along? Are they moving rapidly or slowly, or are they doing nothing?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Secretary will hand me the letter which I have just sent to the desk, I can give the Senator the official answer to that question. I have just asked to have this paper printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate. I will not read the whole letter, because it will take too much time, but the summary can be given in a few words. I will first state that the Chickasaw town-site commission was appointed something like a year ago. I do not recall the exact time, but about then. This is the recapitulation of the Commissioner's letter:

Choctaw town-site commission:
One town, viz, Sterrett, surveyed, platted, appraised, andsold for aggregate of	$19,188.76
At an estimated expense of	3,659.48
One town, viz, Atoka, surveyed and platted, at an approximated expense of	1,841.17

It seems that nothing has been done except the survey of that town. They are—

Now engaged in surveying and platting South McAlester; approximated expense up to March 17, 1900	$4,636.47

The survey and appraisement of one only has been completed and the sale made. In the others there has been no appraisement made after the survey; but two towns have been surveyed in addition to the one where the survey has been made and the sale taken place.

Condition of work at South McAlester:
Expected plat will be received in this office by May 1, 1900.

That is the survey only—

Chickasaw town-site commission:
One town, viz, Colbert, surveyed, platted, appraised, and sold for an aggregate of	$5,072.25
At an estimated cost of	3,472.80

This town-site commission is the only one for the Chickasaw Nation, and they are—

Now engaged in surveying and platting Ardmore; estimated expense to March 10, 1900	$7,121.77

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is the largest town in the Territory.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, it is the very largest, I think. They are now engaged in the survey, but that has not been completed.

Condition of work at Ardmore:
Expected that plat will be received in this office by May 1, 1900.
Muscogee town-site commission:
Estimated expense of work at Muscogee to March 17, 1900	$11,667.33

That is not completed.

Condition of work:
Expected that appraisement of lots will be completed by May 1, 1900.
Wagoner town-site commission:
Total estimated expense to December 31, 1899	4,340.28
Condition of work at Wagoner:
From the reports of the chairman of the commission it is expected that the appraisement of lots in the town of Wagoner will be completed about April 20, 1900.

Total estimated expense of Choctaw town-site commission to March 17, 1900	$11,008.28
Total estimated expense of Chickasaw town-site commission to March 10, 1900	11,571.75
Total estimated expense of Muscogee town-site commission to March 17, 1900	11,752.33
Total estimated expense of Wagoner town site commission to December 31, 1899	4,340.28
Total amount expended by all town-site commissions	38,762.64

Mr. COCKRELL. At the same rate of progress, about what year would they get through?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It would be impossible to finish this work in less than ten or fifteen years, I should think, speaking conservatively. I believe it will take longer. At the same rate at which they are now progressing it would take very much longer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know how the commission is constituted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Under the Atoka agreement there was a provision that there should be one town-site commission for each of these nations—the Chickasaws and the Choctaws. One of the commissioners is to be selected by the chief of the nation, and the other to be selected by the Government of the United States, and in case of any disagreement they are to call in a third party. I understand the usual process is to go to a town, employ a corps of surveyors, and then begin the survey of a town site, the commissioners remaining in the town to determine where streets shall be located, the width of streets, their length and direction, and what changes shall be made. They are to determine the conformation and arrangement of the town, and after the surveys are completed a map is made and sent to the Secretary of the Interior. After he has approved that map, then the commissioners appraise the lots, which are subsequently sold and the matter closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Arkansas withdraws his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have withdrawn it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not referring to that amendment. The Chair was referring to the committee's amendment as it has been amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Excuse me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I believe there is only one other matter passed over in the bill, the proposed committee amendment to strike out section 7. I think it was passed over at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and I call the attention of the Senator to it. The committee reported an amendment to strike out section 7, for the reason that it consists entirely of independent legislation, having no reference in any way to appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee will remember that I offered an amendment to that provision, and I understood that the committee had agreed to the amendment, to come in at the end of line 9, on page 73. That amendment was to add, at the end of line 9, on page 73, these words:

> And all sales and conveyances of lands of deceased allottees by their heirs, which have been duly made and executed by such heirs and duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby ratified and confirmed.

My understanding was that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had examined this amendment; that before the full committee he had stated that it was right, and that there was a report from him, through the Secretary of the Interior, recommending its adoption.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator is correct in his statement, but the committee, on further considering the question, decided that section 7, to which the Senator offers his amendment, was pure legislation, the whole section having no reference whatever to the matter of appropriation, and in accordance with the decision we reached to free this bill, if possible, from matters of pure legislation, we decided that it was better to have the question contained therein settled by a separate and independent measure. On that theory the report recommended the striking out of section 7, which, if agreed to, would leave nothing upon which the Senator could hang his proposed amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the estimation of the committee would the amendment I have read be considered legislation on any other part of the bill?

Mr. THURSTON. The committee so believe. We feel that a point of order would lie to it if offered to any other part of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, before we take action on the striking out of this amendment, I want to amend the amendment, which is in order, and then if the whole thing is stricken out the committee will have this to act upon in conference.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is so.

Mr. THURSTON. I have no objection to that procedure, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

> And all sales and conveyances of lands of deceased allottees by their heirs which have been duly made and executed by such heirs, and duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby ratified and confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now that that is incorporated in the provision as an amendment, the Senator from Nebraska may move to strike it all out.

Mr. THURSTON. I now move to strike out section 7 as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On yesterday I gave notice of an amendment, which I asked to have printed, which I propose to offer on page 54. If the chairman of the committee has nothing else to suggest, I will offer that amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is on page 54, line 17, after the word "Alaska," to insert:

> Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, but shall only make such contracts at places where the Government has not provided school facilities for all the children of school age residing thereat, and to an extent not exceeding the number of children in attendance at said contract schools at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I would make the point of order against the amendment if I thought it would lie, but I am inclined to believe the amendment is germane. I am opposed, however, to its adoption; and in opposing the amendment I have only a very few words to say.

Six years ago the agitation over the matter of sectarian schools for Indian pupils reached a climax. It resulted in compromise action by the Congress of the United States, under which it was understood, and virtually agreed by both Houses of Congress, that we would, from year to year for a period of five years, reduce the appropriation for the support of our Indian pupils in sectarian schools, so that after five years we would make no further appropriation for that purpose. In line with that, Congress and the Department have been from year to year enlarging the Indian school facilities, until to-day the Commissioner of Indian Affairs advises us in the most positive manner that with the schools now in existence and the appropriations made there is no lack of school facilities for the Indian pupils of the nation.

One year ago, after the expiration of the five years, the Appropriations Committee decided to continue the last annual appropriation for sectarian schools for one more year. In the discussion which arose upon that subject the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] took the position that he would oppose the proposed appropriation unless it was understood that that was the end of the appropriation for sectarian school purposes. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] having in charge the bill on that occasion made the following statement:

> Mr. ALLISON. It was understood last year that we would make one further appropriation, and, as I understood it, this is the last appropriation that is expected to be made under the arrangement made some years ago.
> Mr. GALLINGER. With that understanding, I shall make no further objection. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are reaching the end of what I think has been a very pernicious practice.

Mr. President, that appropriation was continued last year, one year beyond the five years originally agreed upon, with the express understanding of the Congress of the United States that that was to be the end of the appropriations for the schooling of our Indian pupils in sectarian institutions.

For my part, I have no particular objection to educating Indian children or any other children in sectarian schools of any denomination. I believe in religious education. I should like to have the pupils of the United States, our Indian pupils included, educated in a religious faith; and, although I might have my own choice as to what particular faith or denomination I should prefer they should be taught, I would much rather that they should be taught the knowledge of God and the truths of the Christian religion in their school days under any denomination or under any branch of the church than I would that they should go without such teaching.

But, Mr. President, the subject of educating our pupils in any other than Government schools has been a matter of very serious discussion and disturbance throughout the length and breadth of the United States. The country settled down five or six years ago to the understanding, obtained from the action of Congress, that we were putting ourselves in a position to do away with sectarian or outside schools for the education of our Indian pupils, and that we were proceeding to reach a point, specified as five years from that time, when we would educate all our Indian pupils in our own schools. In accordance with that, from year to year we have been providing new school facilities, new buildings at different points, enlarging our classes, and to-day, after extending the appropriation for one more year than was originally agreed upon, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs advise us that they can take care of all the Indian pupils who are prepared to attend school or who would attend school in the schools of the United States

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. When he speaks of Government schools does he mean the day schools or the boarding schools provided by the Government? What system is it that he speaks of?

Mr. THURSTON. The Government schools. I refer to both.

Mr. VEST. Can the Senator state what is the relative number of the day schools provided by the Government and the boarding schools?

Mr. THURSTON. I can not without a little examination. I have not the figures in mind at the present time.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this at any greater length. I think it is the true policy of the United States to conduct and carry on its own schools for the Indians without any regard whatever to the religious question. I believe we are prepared to do it. The country understands that we are to do it. So far as I know, there has been a general acquiescence throughout the United States in the settlement that was made of the question six years ago. We have reached the end of the appropriation under the agreement, and I do not believe it is wise from any possible public standpoint to reopen this question and keep it before the country as a matter of agitation any longer.

Mr. KYLE. I raise the point of order against the amendment that it is new legislation upon an appropriation bill. I should like to have that decided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope Senators will pay attention to the exact phraseology of the proposed amendment. I am aware that there has been discussion about the propriety or impropriety of continuing permanently the contract schools, but the conditions presented now are conditions that must be determined within themselves. The propositions in this amendment, it seems to me, ought to commend themselves to the good judgment of the Senate:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, but shall only make such contracts at places where the Government has not provided school facilities for all the children of school age residing thereat, and to an extent not exceeding the number of children in attendance at said contract schools at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

There are a certain number of Indian pupils now in contract schools. If the Government has facilities to educate these children in Government schools, then this amendment will not be operative; but if it should turn out that the Government has no Government schools in which to educate those children who are now in the contract schools, then the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment it is necessary to do so, make a contract for continuing the children in the contract schools, not to exceed the number now in contract schools. It does not enlarge it; it does not extend it; but it simply proposes to provide for the children who are now in contract schools and for whose education there are no adequate Government facilities provided. That is all there is of it.

I am aware that there is a very general impression that the Government has absolutely obligated itself, as was stated by the chairman of the committee, not to continue these appropriations beyond certain years. I propose to read the exact language of the statutes that have been adopted from time to time, and to show that this is an erroneous impression; that, according to my own view, it is not borne out by the law. I know that things may have been said on the floor in the course of the debate that probably might bear that construction, but, after all, we must look at the law to determine what has been passed and what is the law. I have had made up a list of some schools, showing the conditions existing.

Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, for instance, has a school population of 95. There is no Government school, either boarding or day, at that place. There are 95 people not provided for in a Government school. At Red Lake, White Earth Agency, there are, according to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1,909 Indians of school age, and the capacity of the boarding schools for that reservation is 275, leaving 1,634 children for whose education there is no adequate arrangement made by the Government. At Blackfeet, Mont., there are 421 children of school age, and 150 is the capacity of the school. At Crow Agency, in Montana, there are 295 children and a capacity of 150 in the schools. At Fort Belknap there are 322 and a capacity of 100 in the schools. At Flathead there are 387 and no Government schools. At Tongue River there are 384 Indians of school age and the day school of 40 pupils, and no boarding school at all.

At Turtle Mountain, in North Dakota, there are 672 Indians of school age, with day-school facilities for 140 children, and no boarding school. At Umatilla, Oreg., there are 200 children, and 75 are provided for in boarding schools. At Pine Ridge, S. Dak., there are 1,603, and 200 provided for in boarding schools and 1,085 in day schools, leaving 318 not provided for. At Rosebud, S. Dak., there are 1,373 Indians of school age, and boarding-school facilities for 200 and day-school facilities for 517. At Colville, in Washington, the children of school age number 470, with day-school provision for 80, and no boarding school. At Tulalip there are 291 Indians, with facilities for 110 day pupils. At Bayfield, La Pointe Agency, in Wisconsin, there are 1,120 children, with 150 pupils in Government boarding schools and 415 in day schools. At Greenbay, Wis., there are 265 children, with 150 provided for in the boarding schools. At Shoshone, Wyo., there are 377 children of school age, and 150 provided for in the boarding school, with no day school.

Now, in the States in which these schools are located there are some Government schools outside of the Indian reservations, built for the purpose of educating these Indians, but those Indians must be taken away from their reservations and carried to schools more or less remote from these different reservations if the capacity for these pupils is filled. But I promised to call attention to the legislation.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator permit one question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Do I understand from the Senator's statement that he believes the Government is obligated to furnish school facilities for all Indian pupils of school age?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I believe the Government is morally bound to provide for the education of all these people. I do not believe in allowing these people to grow up in dense ignorance. If we have not present school facilities to take care of these children it is our duty to provide them, and where I think an error has been made by gentlemen who have thought this business should be terminated by this time is in the fact that the growth of the accommodations for these pupils has not kept pace with the reduction of the appropriations for contract schools. We have taken 20 per cent off the appropriations for the contract schools year by year, and we have not provided adequate facilities to take care of this number of pupils when they are thrown on the hands of the Government.

I think the Secretary ought now to be authorized to contract for the education of these children, because we have not provided Government schools to take care of them. If the Government schools are at hand where these people can be readily sent, then I think the Secretary should make no contract arrangements, and the Secretary will make no contract arrangements.

Mr. KYLE. The point I make, if the Senator will pardon me, is that these children would not attend if the Government provided the facilities. Not all of the children of school age attend school—not by any means. If there are 450 children of school age at a certain agency, and facilities are provided for 150, that will accommodate all who would attend, probably.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We have the official reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, showing the capacity of the Government schools, and that report for this year shows there was an attendance of more than 600 beyond the capacity of the schools.

Mr. KYLE. That is taking in the sectarian schools.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir; Government schools. In Government schools the attendance has been 600 more than the reported capacity of the schools.

Mr. THURSTON. I will ask the Senator, is not that the enrollment in the schools?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The enrollment.

Mr. THURSTON. And not the average attendance?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course it is not the continuous attendance, because you could not take care of any more than the schools would hold. But there is an enrollment which shows more people wanting to go to school and intending to go to school than the capacity of the schools admitted. The schools are certainly kept full all the time, because there is an enrollment exceeding the capacity.

Mr. THURSTON. The records of the schools show——

Mr. KYLE. The Commissioner tells us that he has ample room——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think Senators had better come on one at a time.

Mr. THURSTON. The records of all schools show that the enrollment considerably exceeds the attendance, and it happens in all of our schools that the real capacity and the practical capacity of the schools are not to be measured by the enrollment, but rather by the daily attendance.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. True, Mr. President, but when we are discussing the capacity of the schools and the enrollment shows there are more pupils ready to go to those schools than they have capacity, we either ought to provide additional schools or allow the Secretary to make contracts with contract schools.

This amendment of mine does not compel the Secretary to send a single pupil to a contract school. It does not say that it shall be his duty, under any conditions, to send a single one of these pupils to contract schools. It merely provides that, if the Government schools are not sufficient at any of these agencies, he may make contracts with contract schools. It is a matter addressed to his discretion, and it is limited in the last paragraph so that no matter what conditions exist he can not make contracts for any more pupils than are now in contract schools.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask the Senator if he desires to go back to the old system——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not.

Mr. KYLE. Of mixing church and state again? We have got rid of that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think there has ever been a system of mixing church and state.

Mr. KYLE. Pretty nearly that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator may have his own opinion about that. I know nothing about it. I do not believe there has been any mixing about it. It is a matter of educating these children. I believe that the contract schools did a grand and a noble work when they were at this work. This system of educating the Indians began as a private enterprise. Certain philanthropists in Philadelphia and the East have built up these institutions of learning in the West. They have been maintained at very great expense to them. The attention of the Government was called to the necessity of this action by their conduct. The Government after a while began to take it up. They have built the schools. I believe we ought to provide ample school facilities for all these children; but until ample school facilities are provided by the Government, I believe we ought to avail ourselves of the facilities that are at hand to educate those children who can not be accommodated in the Government schools.

I have not proposed that it shall be compulsory, I want to repeat to the Senate. I simply propose that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the opportunity to do this if he sees a condition of things that makes it necessary.

I wish to call attention very briefly and for only a very few minutes to the exact facts about the legislation had in this matter. I believe in keeping faith in all these things and in carrying out all the agreements that are made at any time and everywhere. I know the understanding has been—I myself so believed at the time this arrangement was entered into of reducing these appropriations 20 per cent a year—that we would have ample facilities to take care of all these children by the time this thing was concluded.

But if it has not been done—I do not say it has not been—I would have no hesitancy in saying so, but I do not say for the sake of this argument as bearing upon this question that it has not; but all I say is, that if it has not been and the Secretary finds that there are not ample facilities for taking care of these Indian children in Government schools, then that he may, if he believes the best interests of the general public require it, make contracts for taking care of these Indians in contract schools, not exceeding in number those who are now in contract schools.

But I want to call attention to the law. The policy of reducing contract-school appropriations grew out of the following provision in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1895, approved August 15, 1894:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inquire into and investigate the propriety of discontinuing contract schools, and whether, in his judgment, the same can be done without detriment to the education of the Indian children; and that he submit to Congress at the next session the result of such investigation, including an estimate of the additional cost, if any, of substituting Government schools for contract schools, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

In his annual report for 1894 the Secretary of the Interior, having in view this action of Congress doubtless, says:

The contract schools are now the subject of general discussion. I agree fully with those who oppose the use of public money for the support of sectarian schools. But this question should be considered practically. The schools have grown up. Money has been invested in their construction at a time when they were recognized as wise instrumentalities for the accomplishment of good. I do not think it proper to allow the intense feeling of opposition to sectarian education, which is showing itself all over the land, to induce the Department to disregard existing conditions. We need the schools now, or else we need a large appropriation to build schools to take their place.

It would be scarcely just to abolish them entirely—to abandon instantly a policy so long established. My own suggestion is that they should be decreased at the rate of not less than 20 per cent a year. Thus, in a few years more, they would cease to exist, and during that time the Bureau [of Indian Affairs] would gradually be prepared to do without them, while they might gather strength to continue without Government aid.

On December 13, 1894, he said:

It is possible that the plan of annual reduction can not be carried out to the full extent proposed, namely, 20 per cent each year. But, in any event, within a few years, unless unforeseen obstacles arise, the substitution of Government for contract schools should take place.

And toward that end we have been constantly going. If we have reached it, then my amendment will be absolutely inoperative, because it will not amount to anything. If we have not reached it, then it will provide for the education of these children, for whom no proper provision has been made.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the total number?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know the total number. There are about 20,000 children.

Mr. KENNEY. There are about 2,000 of these Indian children who are educated in the contract schools, and by the last report of the Indian Commissioner it is shown that there are about 600 unaccommodated above that number. So there are about 2,600 who would not find accommodations if the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should not be agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, the Senator must bear in mind that the report of the Commissioner was made some little time ago, and, of course, some other schools have been constructed probably during the interval.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There has been very little addition. The increase in the capacity of the schools has been about 4 or 5 per cent a year, while the decrease has been about 20 per cent in the amount that was appropriated for contract schools. The increase last year was only about 1½ to 2 per cent, in the capacity of the schools, less than it has been before. I think I can hunt up those figures without much trouble and give them to the Senate if they are desired.

Mr. VEST. I should be very glad if the Senator from Arkansas, or some other Senator who has given his attention to this matter, would give us the figures showing the boarding schools that are provided for by the Government or have been since the time when this reduction of 20 per cent went into effect, and the day schools. My experience is that that is the most material question in this whole case. I should like to know how many boarding schools there are by the Government, and how many day schools.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not answer the question. There are about 20,000 Indian pupils in schools, as I understand, and I have a list here of schools which accommodate——

Mr. VEST. Day schools or boarding schools?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have a list of boarding schools here—one at White Earth, one at Blackfeet, one at the Crow Agency, Mont.; one at Fort Belknap, one at Umatilla, Oreg.; one at Pine Ridge, one at Rosebud, one at La Pointe, Wis.; one at Green Bay and one at Shoshone, in Wyoming, and these were selected because they were located in reservations where there is not an adequate capacity to take care of all the pupils.

Mr. VEST. That is not all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not by any means all. In many places the capacity of the boarding schools is entirely sufficient to take care of all the Indians, but I have no list of those. In the list I have the capacity of the boarding schools is 1,600 pupils. They have day schools in those same reservations with a capacity of 2,387. There are many places where the boarding schools exist where there is no provision for day schools, and in some there are provisions for day schools and boarding schools. In some others there are provision for day schools but not for boarding schools.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator, who has given much attention to this matter, whether in taking into consideration the schools established by act of Congress he includes the schools whose capacity is inadequate to the number of children?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have just read a number of them.

Mr. ALLEN. And what is the number of children who are practically deprived of education in addition to the number mentioned by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are about 3,500 children in contract schools who are not there by Government order. The Government now has 2,000 children who are cared for in contract schools. The official reports of the Commissioner show that the enrollment in Government schools is 600 in excess of the capacity. So if these children would attend, there would be an overflow of 600, with 2,000 who are now in contract schools, which would make 2,600, and then in addition there are 3,500 in contract schools who are taken care of by private charity—no charge upon the Government and for whom it is not undertaken to provide.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator, in fixing the number who are deprived of school facilities at Government schools, take into consideration those who are deprived of school privileges where a Government school is established in consequence of the lack of capacity of the schools to take care of and educate them?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. For instance, there are some places where no Government school is established at all. Therefore the people who are educated must be educated at contract schools. There are other places where a Government school or Government schools are established, but where the capacity of the school or schools is inadequate to the needs of the children and certain children are deprived of school privileges. Does the Senator, in estimating the number of children who are deprived of school privileges, take into consideration the latter class?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do.

Mr. ALLEN. In fixing the number. What would be the total number of those who are thus deprived, where there are no Government schools at all, and in those cases where schools are established, but of inadequate capacity?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not state that number. All I know is that of those who are enrolled——

Mr. KENNEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator that there are many children of school age who are not actually enrolled.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is true.

Mr. KENNEY. That would still increase the number.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The point I am making now is that there are actually enrolled 2,600 Indian pupils in excess of the capacity of the Government to take care of them, and there ought to be some arrangement made to take care of these pupils who are actually enrolled as pupils. That takes no account of others who are of school age and who ought to be in school, but who are not.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator's amendment, as I understand it, contemplates that as soon as the Government furnishes adequate school privileges for the children who are deprived of an education the contract system shall cease?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Absolutely. That is the intention.

Now I will call the attention of the Senate again to the exact language of the provision. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will pay attention to the language, and he will see how conservatively it has been drawn:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, but shall only make such contracts at places where the Government has not provided school facilities for all the children of school age residing thereat, and to an extent not exceeding the number of children in attendance at said contract schools at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

So it can not be increased above what it is now, and it is less now than the needs of those who are enrolled.

But I was interrupted in stating the extracts from the law which I have had compiled to show what the facts are in this case. In the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1896 there is the following:

The Secretary of the Interior may make contracts for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895, and each succeeding year he shall proportionately so reduce the amount thus used that at the end of five years from the date on which this act goes into effect all contracts for such education shall cease.

Had this provision become law, it may be noted a policy of an annual reduction of 20 per cent would have been settled upon. That was put into the appropriation bill by the House. The life of contract schools would end on the 30th day of June, 1900, but it was not enacted into the law, or it was not accepted by the Senate, and was amended in the Senate to read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895, and the Government shall, as early as practicable, make provision for the education of Indian children in Government schools.

If the provision as it came to the Senate in the House bill had been adopted, it would have been a law settling this matter; and no matter how gross would have been the injustice to the Indian children, we would have been bound by it. But we struck that out and made the provision which I have just read. This provision as I have read it was incorporated in the bill in 1896 and became a part of the law. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report dated November 19, 1894, said:

By gradually reducing the contracts year by year and placing the pupils in Government schools, or, better still, in public schools, the contract schools can be entirely done away with in the course of five or six years, and this without doing any great injury to the parties who have their money invested in contract schools, and at the same time provide adequate facilities for the Indian pupils.

Showing that in these reductions it was the intention all along to see that there were adequate provisions for the Indian pupils before there was an absolute withdrawal of the appropriation on the part of the Government.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask what prevents us now from making ample provision in this bill? If there has not been ample provision made for the schools, why not make it in this bill? Why revive the contract system?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should think it would be impossible to provide for the buildings necessary to carry the schools on during the succeeding year. The Commissioner has asked for certain money to be used in building schoolhouses, and there are liberal appropriations made in this bill for that purpose. Yet after the 30th day of June next there will be 2,000 Indian pupils in contract schools out there who can not be put in contract schools unless some provision of this kind is made in this bill, and this simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to do that if the circumstances surrounding him at the time shall satisfy him that it ought to be done.

Mr. TELLER. I think, if we are practical about this matter, we will see some difficulties ahead of us in reviving the contract-school system. Without meaning to violate any of the rules of the Senate, I think the Senator from Arkansas will see that the chances are nine to ten that if we put anything of this kind in the bill, it will not be allowed to remain there. It seems to me that we might make a provision in this bill by the way of further appropriation that might avoid this difficulty to some extent possibly, if not entirely.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator does not understand that this is a revival of the contract system?

Mr. TELLER. It looks so to me. But then I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me again to read the proposed amendment?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I will.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, but shall only make such contracts at places where the Government has not provided school facilities for all the children of school age residing thereat, and to an extent not exceeding the number of children in attendance at said contract schools at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. ALLEN. That I understand is simply to last until the Government schools are opened.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course the Secretary will not do it unless there is necessity for it at any particular place, and he can not exceed the number that are now in those schools.

Mr. TELLER. What I am concerned about is that whatever we do shall be something practical and shall secure something. I am very confident that that provision will never be enacted into a law in this bill. I make that statement without going into any of the reasons why. I want the Senate, if possible, to provide some method that will meet what is admitted to be a difficulty and almost a disgrace unless we turn these children out. Let it be done in some other way, if possible. I do not know what it is. Is there a law which prohibits the Secretary from contracting any further?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suppose he would construe the law that way unless there is a certain provision of this kind made here.

Mr. TELLER. Why can he not establish temporary schools, renting these buildings for the Indian children, or something of that kind?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Government, of course, in many places where it has day schools, may rent buildings, and it may organize other schools as it may see fit. This has been done in a good many cases, no doubt. We have in this bill an appropriation for all and more than has been asked for by the Commissioner.

Mr. TELLER. As to the 2,000 children that are now liable to be dropped out, can not the Government rent buildings and employ teachers in that way, if we increase the appropriation?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Secretary has full authority to do so.

Mr. TELLER. But has he a sufficient appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. TELLER. Then I think he ought to do that. I think he should establish temporary schools without waiting to erect buildings.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It may be impracticable to do that in a great many of these places——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to reply to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly. I yield the floor; I am about through.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In South Dakota there are about 22,000 Indians, and the two largest contract schools are on reservations, one at Pine Ridge and the other one adjoining the Rosebud Reservation. These schools are full of children, and if the contracts are abolished there are no Government schools that you can take them to and no buildings fit for that purpose except the contract-school buildings built by the Catholic Church. I think the education of these children ought to be conducted in those schools. There is no other remedy except the passage of the Senator's amendment in order to take care of them, because there are no buildings that can be rented. There are no settlements and no towns——

Mr. TELLER. Why can we not rent the buildings of the people who are to close their schools? Of course if they are not to be paid any longer and close their schools, I should think we might rent their buildings, or they might sell their buildings to the Government.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know but that they might sell their buildings to the Government. I do not think they would rent to the Government. The Catholic Church has never done that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Oh, there have been some sales.

Mr. TELLER. I think we should provide money for the purchase of those buildings.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think there is a fund.

Mr. TELLER. These buildings were erected for this purpose, and if we cut them off it is no more than equity that the Government should buy the buildings. I am trying to deal with this question practically. I know you will not enact this provision into a law, and if we rest on this and let the bill go into conference with this provision in it we shall get nothing. I want to get something that will relieve the children, and if it is necessary to buy the buildings I think we should authorize the Secretary to buy them and give him the money for that purpose.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think a provision directing the purchase of the school buildings where they are not fit for any other purpose would be very appropriate.

Mr. TELLER. So do I.

Mr. PETTIGREW. For instance, we induced those people to build the school at Pine Ridge, in South Dakota, and near the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota. Years ago we induced them to erect the buildings; we encouraged their erection; we made a contract with them, and they went on and expended many thousands of dollars, because these are brick school buildings, excellent in every respect; and now we propose to abandon the policy which we inaugurated and which induced them to erect the buildings, and we are to leave the buildings on their hands. Therefore an appropriation requiring the purchase of the buildings would be very appropriate.

As the law now stands the Department will not purchase the buildings, because they have said for the last four years that they had sufficient capacity to take care of all the school children, and yet every year we have added to the number of school buildings and each year the Indian Department has come before the committee and said they had plenty of room. But to-day the report of 1898, which I believe is the latest report on that subject, shows that the capacity of the Government schools is 19,874 pupils. This includes the day schools, the reservation, and the nonreservation boarding schools. The enrollment is 19,899—more than the capacity of the schools.

The capacity of the contract boarding schools is 4,245 and the enrollment 2,509, the average attendance being 2,245, a much greater percentage than the average attendance at Government schools, showing, then, that the Government schools are full to more than their capacity, and that there are 2,509 in the contract boarding schools, 96 in the contract day schools, and in boarding schools specially appropriated for, 394. That is in Hampton and in Lincoln, I think, at this time, Lincoln having been dropped from the present bill. It was the school near Philadelphia. There were in public schools 315 Indian children; in the mission boarding schools 897 Indian children, and in the mission day schools 215 Indian children, making nearly or quite 4,000 Indian children who were accommodated in schools not Government schools. The Government schools were overcrowded.

What can be said, then, of the comment of the Department that they have plenty of capacity to take care of all the children when their own report shows that their own schools are overcrowded and that there are 4,000 children being taken care of in the contract schools? They told us that they had plenty of capacity last year, and the year before, and the year before.

Now, I do not care to discuss this question, but I do wish to say that while we have been reducing the amount which is appropriated for contract schools each year, there has been no agreement to that effect. The people who have desired to stop contracting with these sectarian schools have acknowledged the fact that there was no agreement to that effect by trying, at every session of Congress for the last four years, in this bill to strike out the appropriation. Speech after speech has been made here trying to cut off the appropriation for contract schools, and the advocates of that policy in this body have pronounced decidedly against the proposition that there was any agreement, because they have refused to keep an agreement if there was one. Therefore I argue that there could have been no such understanding.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was just concluding my statement. I remember now that I did not finish the statement I was making in reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and which I wish to make now. He asked the question as to whether the Secretary could not now take care of these schools. By the appropriation of the bill last year there was a provision made saying that that was the last of the appropriations for contract schools. That was done on the basis, of course, all along that the Government would provide adequate accommodations for these Indian children.

Now, I do not think the Secretary has the right to provide for these children at all unless there is a provision made giving him authority, if he sees fit to do so, if circumstances lead him to believe it ought to be done, to take care of these children for the coming year. That was all I desired to say.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. We were told last year by the Indian Department, as I recollect, that they would be ready to take care of these children this year. Is not that the fact?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, yes; they have told us that every year for the last four years right straight along, and recommended it.

Mr. TELLER. Have we anything from the Department which indicates that they are not ready to take charge of these children now?

Mr. KYLE. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated before the committee that he is now ready to receive all; that he can take care of them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. PETTIGREW. I know that the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me explain that. I think we had just as well be candid with each other and have the facts understood. When the question was asked him how he would take care of them, he said the Government had schools in other places, to which children could be taken; for instance, taking them three or four hundred miles away and putting them in schools at some other place, perhaps down here in Norfolk or somewhere up in Pennsylvania where that can be done. I do not think that was in the contemplation of the bill. It was the intention of Congress that these people should be educated on the reservations.

Mr. TELLER. With the consent of the Senator from South Dakota, I want to say just one word.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I am not one of those who have been disturbed about contract schools. I know there was a good deal of feeling got up over them and there was a determination to close them out, and I yielded to that in the Appropriations Committee by providing for a gradual closing out of contract schools, as we thought, on such terms and for such a length of time as would surely secure the ability on the part of the Department to take care of these children so that none of them would be denied the opportunity of going to school, who were already in school, or who wanted to go to school.

Now, I feel that it is useless to attempt to re-create the condition which existed before. I know it will not be done. I know that this provision if put upon the bill will not be enacted into law. That is the way I feel about it; and I feel very much as if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or rather the Secretary of the Interior, more properly speaking, is not now prepared to take care of them, and that if we do not make some provision in addition to what we have done they will not be taken care of. That is why I wanted to put in some more money, if necessary, now, so that the Department could rent or buy these buildings or do something. I should be willing that they should buy the buildings that these people have built, as the Senator from South Dakota suggests. They are of no use to them now for this purpose if they closed them, and I think the Government should buy them at a reasonable rate and establish schools there instead of building schools somewhere else.

I do not have any control in this matter; I am not on the Indian Affairs Committee, and my attention has not been called to this subject; but at the same time, as a practical question, we can put into the bill some more money and authorize the Secretary of the Interior to proceed summarily, if he sees fit, to buy the buildings or rent them, or to do anything he sees fit with that money, so that there will be no discharge of the children from the schools.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in and to the government of the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Unless there be objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I do not intend to refer to any statistical matter in connection with this subject or to deal in anything of the kind. The simple question before the Senate, divested of all its verbiage, is whether these children who will be deprived of educational privileges should enjoy those privileges until such time as the Government furnishes them school privileges of its own.

There has been a good deal of unnecessary discussion in this Chamber heretofore respecting the contract system of schools. It seems to have taken on at times a partisan, if not a sectarian, tint, which, in my judgment, is altogether wrong. General Grant, when President of the United States, congratulated himself that he was the author of a system of contract schools. He encouraged it. He induced the various churches of the United States to go out among the Indians and erect mission schools and conduct them, and to enable them to do so he encouraged Congress in making appropriations from time to time to assist them. It is due, in my judgment, largely to that policy that we see the present march of civilization among the different Indians of the United States and the disintegration of the tribal relation.

Now, Mr. President, I do not myself believe—although this may not be particularly germane to the subject—that it is possible to hire teachers at Government expense in the way the teachers are hired for these schools, who will have the disposition to care for these little wards of the nation as they ought to be cared for. There must something more go with the teacher than the mere salary and mere educational qualifications to impart the highest education to these children. There must be a love of the profession in which the teacher is engaged, and a strong and controlling desire on his or her part to lift these benighted children into a higher state of civilization, and that must be a constantly sustaining influence.

Now, we adopted the policy, I think, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, if I recollect rightly, of reducing the appropriations 20 per cent every year until the aid to the contract schools should be entirely destroyed. No one objected to that at the time, because it was supposed that that would give the sectarian schools an opportunity to dispose of their property and to prepare for the changed policy of the Government, and that it would afford ample time to enable those in charge of the Indian affairs of the nation to establish schools and to provide teachers adequate to the education of the Indian children. But it would seem that that has not been done. Some 2,600, I think that is the minimum, and from that, according to the guesses expressed here in the Chamber, running up to 3,000 or 4,000, Indian children of the United States are entirely without the means of education.

Now, what is there in this proposed amendment?

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to say are there not a great many more than that? There is a school at Santee; one, I think, at Oahu. I think there are several in different parts of the State of South Dakota.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the number is much higher. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. KYLE. And the question occurs to me whether these children would attend the Government schools in case we make provision for them.

Mr. ALLEN. You must make some provision, Mr. President, for compulsory education when you come to deal with this Indian question.

Mr. KYLE. There is no such provision, as I understand it.

Mr. ALLEN. They do exercise in my State a compulsory power over Indian children.

Mr. KYLE. They send teachers to them to try to persuade them to come in when they will not come of their own accord.

Mr. GEAR. So they do in Iowa.

Mr. ALLEN. Let an agent send out and have them brought in.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say to him that I think I shall be able to show from the statistics that the statement that 2,600 Indian children are unprovided for is entirely erroneous, and that the attendance of Indian children, both in contract and Government schools, very slightly exceeds the present accommodation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me? There are 250,000 Indians in the United States under the Government charge, and one in five of those undoubtedly are children of school age, which would make 50,000; and yet the total capacity of all the Government schools is for only 25,000. I think that that lack of accommodation can not be overcome at present, and that those figures are below the fact; that the number is more than one child of school age to five of population.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I was proceeding to say that I can see nothing in this amendment that looks like a revival of the contract system of schools. The amendment simply contemplates that the Government shall contract for the education of these children who will be deprived of school privileges to such time as the Government itself may establish schools for their education. That is not a revival and can not be construed into being a revival of a settled policy to subsidize or encourage private schools, and I believe that course is proper.

The Senator from Colorado asks, Why not buy up their schools? If their school property is practically valueless in consequence of the policy the Government has thus pursued and the Government would seek under those circumstances to purchase these school buildings and the school property, would not that be virtually the confiscation of the property?

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President, I do not suppose that the Government is to buy the property at confiscating prices. The Government will need school buildings somewhere, and very likely those places are quite as valuable as any other. The Government should pay a reasonable sum for them if they buy them at all. I am sure the holders would not be very likely to sell them unless the Government does pay a fair valuation. I do not desire that the Government shall take advantage of the fact that the holders may not have any use for the property in order to beat down the price. I think the Government could not afford to do that.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Government pursues a policy that closes the doors of the schools and makes the buildings empty, and thereby reduces the value of the property, and then asks to fix a value upon the property in that condition, would not that be virtually a confiscation, I ask the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. The Government might do that, but then the Government should take into consideration the condition under which the buildings were constructed, what they cost, and the value that they will be to the Government. They are all of just as much value to the Government as to the people who built them if the Government chooses to make schools there, and the Government will not buy buildings anywhere unless it is going to have schools at that place.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Government has not pursued that policy heretofore.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Government has bought some buildings. I do not know anything about the price, whether it was reasonable or not.

Mr. ALLEN. As I understand it, the Government proposes that these schools shall remain closed and that the children shall go uneducated until such time as the Government, in its own deliberations may see proper to erect or purchase schools and open them for the benefit of these children. Now, I think that is wrong. I do not care who owns the property. I do not care where the money comes from that constructs the buildings. What we are interested in and what the people of this country are interested in is the education of the Indian children, the lifting up of this class of our people, their civilization, that they may become of value to themselves and in time become valuable citizens; and any change that will be productive of such results ought to be welcomed by the Congress of the United States. We can not afford, in a little matter like this, to accommodate two or three thousand children with school privileges for a year or so, to bicker and split hairs and chop logic upon subjects that are not germane to the matter under discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. THURSTON. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, it is perhaps fair, before the discussion proceeds further, that I should make an additional statement with reference to these contract schools.

The contract schools, for the most part, like the mission schools established in some parts of our country, were constructed in pursuance of a great missionary plan by the Catholic Church. In my judgment, they were established by the Catholic Church for a great Christian purpose, for the purpose of carrying on missionary work among the Indians of the United States.

It is true that we welcomed the construction of some of those contract schools on our Indian reservations, and that for many years we provided or contracted for the education of our Indian pupils therein. When we reached the point where it was proposed by a great reduction to eliminate the contract plan for educating the Indian children, it was stated from the floor of the Senate repeatedly, it was authorized by the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Commissioner repeatedly, that the Government of the United States was ready and willing and had the available appropriations to buy all these schools from the church and make them Government schools.

But, Mr. President, why has that not been done? Not because of any unwillingness on the part of the United States, but because the owners of those school buildings have refused to sell. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has his appropriation to-day, and stands ready to buy any of those schools at fair and reasonable prices. Why will they not sell? They will not sell because as to those schools they have not sold—for we have bought two or three of them—they do not propose to give up the schools to the United States or to anybody else, and that is the proposition to-day.

The idea that the 2,000 pupils in these religious contract schools are to be turned back this year upon the United States for education is a myth. The church carrying on these schools, as I say, in pursuance of a great, wise, and beneficent missionary plan, does not propose to give the schools up; it does not propose to surrender the pupils to the United States; and, as a matter of fact, there is not a pupil now who is being educated in one of the contract schools who will be turned over to the United States for education next year if this amendment is not adopted.

The Government of the United States has always, properly and wisely, welcomed the missionary efforts of the Catholic Church, and of all other churches. They have their mission schools in some parts of the country where we have never paid them for the education of their pupils; they are carrying on those schools and will continue to carry them on. God speed them in the work. They are giving their pupils an ordinary education and an education in the faith of their church in the so-called contract schools. They do not propose to abandon those schools or sell them to the United States or to refuse longer to educate Indian pupils there. God speed them in their work. We are willing to open up all the reservations of the United States to the missionary efforts of all the churches that believe in the Christian religion without respect to creed or denomination or the particular branch of the faith.

Mr. President, just one other suggestion. We are ready to buy those schools when their owners are ready to sell at fair prices. That is a part of the plan of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. If they are ready to turn their pupils over to us, we are ready to buy their schools. There will be no failure of educational facilities whether they wish to sell or not.

Just one other thought. The capacity of the schools on Indian reservations or off, Indian schools or white men's schools, is measured not by the enrollment of pupils, but by the average daily attendance. It so happens that almost every Indian school in the United States, say with a capacity of 500 pupils, can adequately, completely, and fully carry on the education, and all that is required of it, for an enrollment of six or seven hundred pupils. To-day, measured by the true test—that is, the test of daily attendance, which measures the daily demand—our Indian school facilities are as large or larger than the demands can possibly be for the coming year; in addition to which, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the general appropriations of this bill, have an adequate fund at their disposal with which to buy or rent or set up and establish all additional necessary schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is a matter of regret to me that this question, which some of us had supposed was finally settled, is renewed, even under the amendment, guarded as it is, which has been offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Turning to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 7, 1899, it will be found that this entire question was gone over. I took the position in that debate that I hoped the question of making these appropriations had been settled the year before, but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] rather insisted that it was a proper matter to continue the appropriation for one year more. In response to the Senator from Iowa I remarked:

> With that understanding, I shall make no further objection. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are reaching the end of what I think has been a very pernicious practice.

Subsequently, and in answer to a statement made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], I ventured to say:

> We had a distinct understanding last year, and the RECORD will show it, that certainly not more than one further appropriation should be made for this purpose. That appropriation is contained in the pending bill.

It is proper for me to say that the Senator from South Dakota gave notice during that debate that for himself he would not agree that the question was settled, but that he should reopen it this year; and I am surprised that it was not reopened by the Senator from South Dakota rather than by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. President, we passed the bill last year, and turning to it I read in it this language—and I venture to say that the statutes of the United States can be searched and that very likely no similar provision can be found in any statute—

> This being the final appropriation for sectarian schools.

The statute itself said to the country, said to the Senate, said to everybody, that this was the final appropriation for sectarian schools; and with that agreement, with that understanding, with that statutory provision, those of us who have contended that we ought not to appropriate the public money for sectarian education agreed that that should become the law and it became the law.

Mr. President, I think that some misinformation has been given to the Senate on this question to-day. It is said that there are 2,600 Indian children enrolled in excess of the present school facilities. I can not find that to be so. I have here the annual report of the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and under the head of Indian affairs, on page 595, there is a recapitulation regarding the Indian schools. That recapitulation shows that in the Government schools there is a capacity of 19,874; that there is an enrolment of 19,899, with an average attendance of 16,165; in other words, that in the Government schools we have accommodations for 3,709 children more than attend them. Turning to the contract schools, I find that there is an attendance of 2,639, and in the mission schools, 1,111, making 3,750. Deducting from that the provision for 3,709 in excess of those who attend the Government schools, there is only a lack of school facilities for 41 Indian children. I do not know whether that is absolutely correct or not. The Senator from South Dakota says it does not take into account all the Indian children, but this is the statement of the Secretary of the Interior, through the Indian Office, and it ought to be accurate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator if those figures do not simply show the enrollment and attendance? They do not show the number of children of school age.

Mr. GALLINGER. They do not. They show the enrollment and attendance, precisely as we provide for education in all the States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I know; but our census shows the number of children of school age, and we provide for all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, we do not build schoolhouses to have them remain empty. We have to-day in the Government Indian schools provision for 3,709 more Indian children than are attending them. It is idle to say that we ought to build schoolhouses upon the hypothesis that there are somewhere some children who are not enrolled. I think it is absurd.

Mr. President, one year ago the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said, in answer to an interrogatory before the committee:

> All I have to say is, as I told you last year, that we can take care of all the Indian children.

He stated in 1898 that the Government could take care of all the Indian children; he repeated it in 1899; and he has repeated it again in 1900; and yet Senators insist that we are doing a great wrong in not providing adequate facilities for educating the Indian children of the country.

Mr. President, I turn to Report No. 711, printed on the 23d day of March, 1900. It is the testimony given before a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia in reference to the public schools of this District. If Senators will take the trouble to examine this testimony, they will find that it is stated over and over again by supervisors of schools and by the superintendent of schools that in this District there are some 2,000 children whose education is not provided for so far as school facilities are concerned. In the District of Columbia there are 2,000 children who can not attend the schools all day simply because there are no seats in the schoolhouses for them. I want to read two or three paragraphs:

> The CHAIRMAN. Have you room for the accommodation of all the scholars?

This question was addressed to the superintendent of the schools.

> Mr. POWELL. Not without half-day schools.
> The CHAIRMAN. You have not room enough?
> Mr. POWELL. No; never have had.
> The CHAIRMAN. How much more room would be required to accommodate them now, and then as they increased how much would be required? What additional expenditures must be made now for all the pupils who want to go to school to be accommodated?
> Mr. POWELL. I can not answer that offhand.

Turning to the testimony of Mr. A. T. Stuart, male supervising principal of the third division, we find the following:

> The CHAIRMAN. Is there a recommendation in the report of the Commissioners that would meet the purpose if it were carried out by legislation?
> Mr. STUART. The superintendent could answer that as applied to the whole city. As applied to the eastern portion of the city, I would say that we have a good many half-day schools, and the half-day school has as much to do with the alleged deficiency of the pupil in the studies as anything else.

Mr. W. B. Patterson, supervising principal of the sixth division, testified as follows:

> I would like, with your permission, to say a little more in regard to the crowded condition of the sixth division—those new school buildings.
> I have mentioned the fact that I have 52 half-day schools. When I say 52, I mean 52 enforced half-day schools in which the children have to attend a half day only.

Mr. President, that is the testimony that was given before our committee, and the report is full of it, showing that even in the capital of the nation we have not adequately provided for the education of every child of school age; and the teachers of the District of Columbia are compelled—and I think it is a shame, and a burning shame, and ought to be remedied—to take some 2,000 children into the public schools of the District of Columbia and give them only a half day's schooling, so that they can be dismissed and other children come in and take their places. We are doing better in regard to the Indian children roaming on our Western prairies than we are doing for the children of the people who live in the city of Washington, the capital of the nation.

But I do not suppose any Senator would stand here and seriously contend that because we can not, or have not, provided accommodations for those 2,000 children in the city of Washington that we ought to put them in sectarian schools at Government expense. I do not believe that any Senator would argue that that ought to be done.

In a hearing before the Committee on Indian Affairs two gentlemen, members of the House of Representatives, appeared and argued that this contract-school system should be continued. They bear the same name, but they represent two different States. They made a very earnest argument in behalf of the continuance of the appropriations for contract schools. One of those gentlemen last year appeared in the city where I live, and in a public address denounced me as a bigot because I opposed the use of public money for sectarian education. Mr. President, that did not disturb me at all then, and it does not disturb me now, no matter what his opinion of me personally may be.

I simply wish to say that I am not a bigot. The last relic of religious intolerance in the constitution of the State of New Hampshire went out on my motion in the constitutional convention. I am certainly as free from bigotry in religious matters as any man who lives, but I have been for a long time of the opinion that we have no right to appropriate the money of the people of the United States for the purpose of educating children in sectarian schools. I have stated that over and over again in the Senate. I state it again to-day, and I congratulate the country that at length we have come to the end of this practice, which is in violation of the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution of the United States, and I do profoundly regret that the Senator from Arkansas has seen fit, even in the guarded manner in which the amendment is drawn, to reopen this question.

I trust, Mr. President, that the Senate will think it wise not to adopt the amendment, for I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that even if we should take action of that kind here to-day it will not go into the law; it will not become a statute. It simply keeps up an agitation that can do no possible good.

I wish that the Senator from Arkansas might see his way clear to withdraw the amendment, and that we might all agree with the Committee on Indian Affairs, who, after patiently and carefully considering this question, have presented a bill that ends this vexed question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I should like to hear that amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, on page 54, line 14.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I remember very well the lively discussion which took place here three or four years ago upon this question.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] stated very correctly the position which General Grant took when he invited the religious people of the country, without regard to their church or denomination, to come forward and take hold of the subject of Indian education. He was justly proud of it and of the very large degree of success that the scheme attained. It was considered a credit to the country as proving that the Government of the United States was really a kindly, a fatherly, and a just Government. But the consequence of it by and by was that there were here Baptist schools, there Methodist schools, there Episcopalian schools, and there Catholic schools, and that the Government was apparently identifying itself with ecclesiastical organizations, because it paid them for the education of the Indian children. It did not pay those churches as Catholics, or Baptists, or Methodists; it paid them as Christian organizations that were willing to assist in the education of those forlorn people.

By and by a great cry came up against any connection of the state with the church—with any kind of a church—and the wave surged up against these walls, demanding that there be a complete, total, and instant severance of all relations between the Government and the churches. I do not think there was a relation between the Government and the churches; but no matter, the arrangement was unsatisfactory. The discussion went on. The demand was imperative and instant that the Government should cease paying anything to a school conducted by a denomination. The result of that then—very much more so than now—would have been to turn many thousands of Indian children onto the prairie, with no schoolhouses and no places in which to be educated, except as there might be here and there an attempt by some generous citizen or some particular church to build a schoolhouse and carry it on without the aid of the Government.

I remember just how I felt then, and just what I said, and I think I am about in the same position now. I said that if the Government decided to sever this relation it was in duty bound to instantly begin with the greatest energy the erection of strictly Government schoolhouses. Then I said—and a very large majority of the Senate finally said, I only following the rest—that it would be exceedingly cruel to do this instantly. I remember everybody finally agreed that to instantly cut off that relation would be a great hardship. So the determination was substantially this: That the arrangement should end as soon as the Government could put up schoolhouses; but that when it did not put up schoolhouses it might continue to educate young Indians in these various religious schools, proceeding, if they determined to do this, with as much energy as they could to supply the places of such religious schools. It was simply a humane, just, and generous provision. It was thought that a year or two would answer, when the relation would be entirely severed and the Government would have provided new schoolhouses. It has not turned out to be so.

I shut my eyes to the question of denomination. I would rather a child of mine, and of course you would rather your child, should be educated in any one of these denominational schools than not to be educated at all. If the condition yet remains so that the Government can not put the children in school anywhere, let them hire somebody else to impart education to these children; and if it is religious establishment, so much the better.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall very gladly support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I think it is just, proper, and humane. The only objection I could possibly make to it is that the amendment does not go far enough. I shall not take the time of the Senate in discussing this oft-debated question as to the contract schools. My opinions have been so emphatically and repeatedly expressed that it is hardly necessary for me now to give information on that subject to anyone who has taken any interest in the matter.

There are people in this country, unfortunately, who believe that an Indian child had better die an utter unbeliever, an idolator even, than to be educated by the Society of Jesus or in the Catholic Church. I am very glad to say that I have not the slightest sympathy with that sort of bigotry and fanaticism. I was raised a Protestant; I expect to die one; I was never in a Catholic Church in my life, and I have not the slightest sympathy with many of its dogmas; but, above all, I have no respect for this insane fear that the Catholic Church is about to overturn this Government. I should be ashamed to call myself an American if I indulged in any such ignorant belief.

I look upon this as a man of the world, practical, I hope, in all things, and especially in legislation, where my sphere of duty now is. Unfortunately, I am not connected with any religious organization. I have no such prejudice as would prevent me from doing what I believed to be my duty. I would give this question of the education of Indian children the same sort of consideration that I would if I were building a house or having any other mechanical or expert business carried on. I had infinitely rather see these Indians Catholics than to see them blanket Indians on the plains, ready to go on the war path against civilization and Christianity.

I said a few minutes ago that I was a Protestant. I was reared in the old Scotch Presbyterian Church; my father was an elder in it, and my earliest impressions were that the Jesuits had horns and hoofs and tails, and that there was a faint tinge of sulphur in the circumambient air whenever one crossed your path. Some years ago I was assigned by the Senate to duty upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I was assigned by the committee, of which Mr. Dawes was then the very zealous chairman, to examine the Indian schools in Wyoming and Montana. I did so under great difficulties and with labor which I could not now physically perform. I visited every one of them. I crossed that great buffalo expanse of country, where you can now see only the wallows and trails of those extinct animals, and I went to all these schools. I wish to say now what I have said before in the Senate, and it is not the popular side of this question by any means, that I did not see in all my journey, which lasted for several weeks, a single school that was doing any educational work worthy the name of educational work unless it was under the control of the Jesuits. I did not see a single Government school, especially these day schools, where there was any work done at all.

Something has been said here about the difference between enrollment and attendance. I found day schools with 1,500 Indian children enrolled and not ten in attendance, except on meat days, as they called it, when beeves were killed by the agent and distributed to the tribe. Then there was a full attendance. I found schools where there were old, broken-down preachers and politicians receiving $1,200 a year and a house to live in for the purpose of conducting these Indian day schools, and when I cross-examined them, as I did in every instance, I found that their actual attendance was about three to five in the hundred of the enrollment. I do not care what reports are made, for they generally come from interested parties. You can not educate the children with the day schools.

In 1850 Father De Smet, a self-sacrificing Christian Jesuit, went at the solicitation of the Flatheads to their reservation in Montana. The Flatheads sent two runners, young men, to bring the black robes to educate them and teach them the religion of Christ.

Both of those runners were killed by the Blackfeet and never reached St. Louis. They then sent two more. One of them was killed, and the other made his way down the Missouri River after incredible hardships and reached St. Louis. Father De Smet and two young associates went out to the Flathead Reservation and established the mission of St. Mary in the Bitter Root, and St. Ignatius on the Jocko Reservation. The Blackfeet burned the St. Mary mission, killed two of the Jesuits and thought they had killed the other—Father Ravaille. I saw him, when on this committee, lying in his cell at the St. Mary's mission, paralyzed from the waist down, but performing surgical operations, for he was an accomplished surgeon, and doing all that he possibly could do for humanity and religion. He had been fifty-two years in that tribe of Indians. Think of it! Fifty-two years. Not owning the robe on his back, not even having a name, for he was a number in the semimilitary organization called the Company of Jesus; and if he received orders at midnight to go to Africa or Asia he went without question, because it was his duty to the cause of Christ and for no other consideration or reason.

Father De Smet established these two missions and undertook to teach the Indian children as we teach our children in the common schools by day's attendance. It was a miserable failure. The Jesuits tried it for years, supported by contributions from France, not a dollar from the Government, and they had to abandon the whole system. They found that when the girls and boys went back to the tepee at night all the work of the day by the Jesuits was obliterated. They found that ridicule, the great weapon of the Indian in the tepee, was used to drive these children away from the educational institutions established by the Jesuits. When the girl went back to the tepee with a dress on like an American woman and attempted to speak the English language, and whom the Nuns were attempting to teach how to sew and spin and wash and cook, she was ridiculed as having white blood in her veins, and the result was that she became the worst and most abandoned of the tribe, because it was necessary in order to reinstate herself with her own people that she should prove the most complete apostate from the teachings of the Jesuits.

After nearly twenty years of this work by the Jesuits they abandoned it, and they established a different system, separating the boys and the girls, teaching them how to work, for that is the problem, not how to read or spell, nor the laws of arithmetic, but how to work and to get rid of this insane prejudice taught by the Indians from the beginning that nobody but a squaw should work, and that it degrades a man to do any sort of labor, or in fact to do anything except to hunt and go to war.

The hardest problem that can be proposed to the human race is how to make men self-dependent. There can be no self-respect without self-dependence. There can be no good government until a people are elevated up to the high plane of earning their bread in the sweat of their faces. When you come to educate negroes and Indians there is but one thing that will ever lift them out of the degradation in which long years of servitude and nomadic habits have placed them, and that is to teach them that the highest and greatest and most elevating thing in the human race is to learn how to work and to make themselves independent.

I take off my hat, metaphorically, whenever I think of this negro in Alabama—Booker Washington. He has solved that problem for his race, and he is the only man who has ever done it. Fred Douglass was a great politician, but he never discovered what was necessary for the negro race in this country. I have just returned from the South after a sojourn of five weeks upon the Gulf of Mexico. The negro problem is the most terrible that ever confronted a civilized race upon the face of the earth. You can not exterminate them; you can not extradite them; you must make them citizens as they are and as they will continue to be. You must assimilate them. Exportation is a dream of the philanthrophist, demonstrated to be such by the experiment in Liberia. Mr. Lincoln tried it, and took his contingent fund immediately after the war, shipped negroes to a colony in the West Indies, and those who were left from the fever after two years came back to the United States, and every dollar expended was thrown away. Washington, this negro in Alabama, has struck the keynote. It will take years to carry it out, and he has the prejudices of his own race and the prejudices of the ignorant whites against him; but he deserves the commendation of all the people, not only of the United States, but those of the civilized world.

Mr. President, the Jesuits have elevated the Indian wherever they have been allowed to do so without interference of bigotry and fanaticism and the cowardice of insectivorous politicians, who are afraid of the A. P. A. and the votes that can be cast against them in their district and States. They have made him a Christian, and above even that have made him a workman able to support himself and those dependent upon him. Go to the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and look from the cars of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and you will see the result of what Father De Smet and his associates began and what was carried on successfully until the A. P. A. and the cowards who are afraid of it struck down the appropriation. There are now 400 Indian children upon that reservation without one dollar to give them an hour's instruction of any kind. That is the teaching of many professors of the religion of Christ in the Protestant churches. I repudiate it. I would be ashamed of myself if I did not do it, and if it were the last accent I ever uttered in public life it would be to denounce that narrow-minded and unworthy policy based upon religious bigotry.

This A. P. A. did me the greatest honor in my life during their last session in this city, two years ago. They passed a resolution unanimously demanding that I should be impeached because I said what I am saying now. Mr. President, the knowledge of the Constitution of this country developed by that organization in demanding the impeachment of a United States Senator for uttering his honest opinion in this Chamber puts them beyond criticism. It would be cowardly and inhuman to say one word about ignorance so dense as that.

Mr. President, as I said, go through this reservation and look at the work of the Jesuits, and what is seen? You find comfortable dwellings, herds of cattle and horses, intelligent, self-respecting Indians. I have been to their houses and found that under the system adopted by the Jesuits, the new system, as I may call it, after the failure of that which was attempted for twenty years, to which I have alluded, after they had educated these boys and girls and they had intermarried, the Jesuits would go out and break up a piece of land and build them a house, and that couple became the nucleus of civilization in the neighborhood. They had been educated under the system which prevented them from going back to the tepee after a day's tuition. The Jesuits found that in order to accomplish their purpose of teaching them how to work and to depend upon themselves it was necessary to keep them in school, a boarding school, by day and night, and to allow even the parents to see them only in the presence of the brothers or the nuns.

I undertake to say now—and every Senator here who has passed through that reservation will corroborate my statement—that there is not in this whole country an object lesson more striking than that to be seen from the cars of the Northern Pacific Railroad, the fact that these Jesuits alone have solved the problem of rescuing the Indians from the degradation in which they were found.

Mr. President, these Jesuits are not there, as one of them told me, for the love of the Indian. Old Father Ravaille told me, lying upon his back in that narrow cell, with the crucifix above him, "I am here not for love of the Indian, but for the love of Christ," without pay except the approval of his own conscience. If you send one of our people, a clergyman, a politician even, to perform this work among the Indians, he looks back to the fleshpots of Egypt. He has a family, perchance, that he can not take with him on the salary he receives. He is divided between the habits and customs and luxuries of civilized life and the self-sacrificing duties that devolve upon him in this work of teaching the Indians.

The Jesuit has no family. He has no ambition. He has no idea except to do his duty as God has given him to see it; and I am not afraid to say this, because I speak from personal observation, and no man ever went among these Indians with more intense prejudice against the Jesuits than I had when I left the city of Washington to perform that duty. I made my report to the Secretary of the Interior, Senator TELLER, now on this floor, and I said in that report what I say here and what I would say anywhere and be glad of the opportunity to say it.

Mr. President, every dollar you give these day schools might as well be thrown into the Potomac River under a ton of lead. You will make no more impression upon the Indian children than if you should take that money and burn it and expect its smoke by some mystic process to bring them from idolatry and degradation to Christianity and civilization. If you can have the same system of boarding schools supported by the Government that the Jesuits have adopted after long years of trial and deprivation, I grant that there might be something done in the way of elevating this race.

The old Indians are gone, hopelessly gone, so far as civilization and Christianity are concerned. They look upon all work as a degradation and that a squaw should bear the burden of life. The young Indian can be saved. There are 3,000 of them to-day in the Dakotas—in South Dakota, I believe—who are voters, exercising intelligently, as far as I know, the right of suffrage. Go to the Indian Territory, where there are the Five Civilized Tribes, and you will see what can be done by intelligent effort, not with day schools, but with schools based upon the idea of taking the children and removing them from the injurious influence of the old Indians and teaching them the arts of civilization and of peace.

If I have ever done anything in my whole career in this Chamber of which I am sincerely proud, it is that upon one occasion I obtained an appropriation of $10,000 for an industrial school at St. Ignatius, in Montana. A few years afterwards, in passing through to the Pacific coast, I stopped over to see that school. They heard I was coming and met me at the depot with a brass band, the instruments in the hands of Indian boys, and they played without discrimination Hail Columbia and Dixie. They had been taught by a young French nobleman whom I had met two years before at the mission, who had squandered the principal portion of his fortune in reckless dissipation in the salons of Paris and had suddenly left that sort of life and joined the Company of Jesus and dedicated himself to the American missions. He was an accomplished musician, and he taught those boys how to play upon the instruments.

I went up to the mission and found there these Indian boys making hats and caps and boots and shoes and running a blacksmith shop and carrying on a mill and herding horses and cattle. The girls and boys when they graduated, intermarrying, became heads of families as reputable and well-behaved and devoted to Christianity as any we can find in our own States. They were Catholics. That is a crime with some people in this country.

Mr. President, are we to be told that a secret political organization in this country shall dictate to us what we ought to do for this much-injured race whom we have despoiled of their lands and homes and whom God has put upon us as an inheritance to be cared for? I accuse no Senator here of any other motive than a desire to do his public duty. I shall do mine, and I should gladly vote for an amendment to this bill infinitely stronger than that of the Senator from Arkansas. I would put this work, imperative upon us, in the hands of those who could best accomplish it, as I would give the building of my house to the best mechanic, who would put up a structure that suited me and met the ends I desired. If the Catholics can do it better than anybody else, let them do it. If the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Congregationalist, or any other denomination can do it, give the work to them: but to every man who comes to me and says this is a union of church and state, I answer him, "Your statement is false upon the very face of it." Instead of teaching the Indian children that they must be Catholics in order to be good citizens, they are simply taught that work is ennobling, and with the sense of self-dependence and not of dependence upon others will come civilization and Christianity. These are my feelings, Mr. President, and I would be glad if I could put them upon the statute books.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in listening to the very eloquent and interesting remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], whom we have the opportunity of listening to all too seldom in this Chamber, I could not but be reminded of the passage in Macaulay's Essay upon Milton, in which he says, referring to Charles I:

> We say that he violated the petition of right; and we are told that he took his little boy upon his knee and kissed him. We say that he arrested the five members in violation of the constitution of England; and we are told that he was a good husband and father.

Mr. President, I do not believe it is right, by any principle of constitutional law or any American doctrine that I have ever known, to tax one man to support another man's religion. I do not believe it is right to tax one man to support the Presbyterian Church or Congregationalist Church, and there is no human being within the sound of my voice who would not agree with that and who would think of calling me a bigot or intolerant. But the moment I say I think the same principle applies to taxing a man and giving the public money to the Roman Catholic Church, then I am called intolerant, bigoted, and we hear that this is dictated by the A. P. A., the work of insectivorous politicians.

Mr. President, I opposed these grants to contract schools before there was any such organization as the A. P. A. in existence, when I first entered Congress. I opposed them on the general principle that I had no right to vote the money out of one man's pocket into another's for the sake of that other's religion; and there is no getting away from the soundness of that principle.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts one question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did the Senator ever hire a Catholic carpenter.

Mr. LODGE. That has nothing on earth to do with it. My money I can do with as I please. I am administering here the public money, and I have no right to tax the Congregationalists to propagate the religion or the faith of the Baptist or the Presbyterian. I have no right to tax the Presbyterian to support the faith or the belief of the Congregationalist or the Baptist. It is a plain and simple principle. No one would deny it. But anyone who ventures to apply it to these schools is called a bigot, an intolerant, and speaking at the dictates of a secret society. I never belonged to a secret society in my life, and I am not going to be deterred from speaking what I believe to be good American doctrine either by having the name of a society flung at me or by being threatened with the terrors of any faith.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I pass by what the Senator says about not being intimidated or deterred and all that, which nobody has attempted to do, for I expressly stated that I did not charge any Senator here with doing anything else than what he believed to be his public duty. I should like to know from the Senator if he does not favor and if he has not favored taxing Roman Catholics to support the common schools of the country, when they distinctly——

Mr. BATE. In Massachusetts.

Mr. VEST. In Massachusetts and in all the other States, too. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not favor taxing Roman Catholics to support the common schools, where they distinctly avow that their money should not be appropriated to these schools. I should also like to ask the Senator if he does not at every session of Congress take the tax money of the people of the United States and give it to contractors to do public work; and what is the difference between improving a river and harbor or putting up a public building and educating these Indians in order to make them good citizens, not to make them Roman Catholics, but to give them any religion rather than no religion at all?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I most certainly have voted here and I know I have voted in the legislature of Massachusetts, and I voted in my town meetings to appropriate money for the public schools. The tax falls on everybody, and the schools are open to everybody. They are nonsectarian and they teach no faith in those schools. They are open to every American child in my State, and there is no faith, no sect taught. No creed is preached in the public schools. That is a proper subject of taxation.

I do not think that we have the right to vote the public money for religious teaching or for the propagation of one creed against another. I attack no creed. I recognize quite as fully as the Senator from Missouri the great services that have been done by the missionaries to whom he refers. I think the sacrifices of the Christian missionaries of all sects have been among the most beautiful pages in the history of humanity. But it does not seem to me, Mr. President, that our admiration for that should blind us to the principle to which I have alluded.

It used to be the case in my State under the constitution that the people were taxed for the support of a particular church, the Congregationalist Church. That was abolished in 1820, when we amended the constitution. It was right to abolish it. It was living up to the proper American principles to do it. We had no right through the legislature of Massachusetts to take the money of the Catholic or the Presbyterian and devote it to the upholding of the Congregationalist Church; and that is the only principle which is involved here.

I did not mean, Mr. President, to say even as much as this. I do not agree with the proposition which I understood the Senator from Missouri to lay down, that we can not educate the Indians except in this way. I should be slow to believe that the Government schools were a failure entirely.

The point I desired particularly to make was in regard to the process and course of this legislation. It has been in controversy in Congress ever since I entered the lower House, now more than twelve years ago. It went on, the controversy growing and growing, until finally an agreement was reached, really between the views of the House and the views of the Senate, but also between the different elements in the Senate, and that agreement was, as I understand, that we should gradually reduce these appropriations. The argument was met year after year, and it was always met by the same statement, that if we did this it would be an act of great cruelty; that we should turn children out into the prairies to be left to a cold world and to receive no education whatever.

Mr. President, if we should cut off this appropriation this year or if we had cut it off last year or the year before, I do not believe that one single Indian child less would have received education than before. Certain excellent people have got a Government appropriation. They would rather keep that appropriation than get it from philanthropic people who will contribute or take it out of their own pockets or wherever they may draw it from. It is perfectly natural. I have no fault at all with their attitude. It is a perfectly natural one and is not to be criticised. But the point is that we agreed to certain things, as I understand it. There was a steady reduction to go on, and at the end of that time the appropriation was to cease. It was stated here over and over again by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. We carried it one year over the established time. There it stands in the law, which I believe to be a very unusual thing, stating in the last year's law that that is the final appropriation.

Now, Mr. President, that having been carefully agreed on and worked out, I do not think it is well to reopen it. I do not think these annual debates are helpful, either to the cause of education among the Indians or to their civilization. We reached a common understanding, and we put it into law. Certainly there must be some point where we can come to an agreement and not have to have this policy fought over and over all the time. It has been the policy of the Government deliberately to give up these contract schools.

The Protestant schools were taken by the Government long ago

The Government stands ready to take the rest. They are not taken because, as has been said here, those who have them do not want to give them up. We have carried out the legislation as agreed on between the Houses, and we have given a year over, and now we are met with the fulfillment of that agreement, with the termination of that policy. It seems to me a very great mistake to reopen this old question and to have it fought out again, as it will be fought out; for, Mr. President, there are some of us who, despite all that is said about bigotry and intolerance, feel that there is something in the principle that taxes should not be levied on one man to support another man's faith, and who propose to stand on that principle and make such poor fight for it as they can.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we were all charmed with the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that his voice is heard quite too seldom in this Chamber. But I want to dissent from two propositions which the Senator advanced, if I understood him correctly.

One is that action on the part of Senators who have opposed these appropriations has been because of intimidation from a certain organization known as the A. P. A. Certainly I have not been influenced by any such consideration, nor do I believe that any other Senator has been.

The other observation I wish to make is that I dissent entirely from the view the Senator stated as regards our Government schools. If I understood him correctly, he said that we might as well take this money that we appropriate to Government schools and destroy it, burn it up, or throw it into the Potomac River as to appropriate it in this way.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I beg pardon, but the Senator is mistaken. I distinctly stated that I referred to the day schools, and that if the Government would adopt the boarding-school system, as has been done by the Jesuits, they might have some hope of teaching these Indians, but they never could do it with the aid of the day schools. I repeat that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, the Government has adopted boarding schools. The criticism of the Senator does not have certainly a universal application.

Now, Mr. President, I have visited some Government schools for Indian children, and I have seen exactly the condition there existing that the Senator has pictured in the Jesuit schools. I had an opportunity of visiting the Government school on the old Fort Totten Reservation, on the shores of Devils Lake, in North Dakota, and I wish every Senator could visit that school. There he will find a large number of Indian children learning the trades. They have a harness shop, a blacksmith shop, and a shoemaking shop. The girls are taught cooking and sewing and all the useful arts of civilized life. The Senator says that he was met on a certain occasion by a brass band, the instruments being in the hands of Indian children, when he visited a Jesuit school. I had exactly the same experience at Fort Totten, and they played very well indeed—much better music than we get in New Hampshire at the ordinary political rallies.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator whether that was a boarding school or a day school?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a boarding school.

Mr. VEST. A boarding school is all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is precisely what the Government is doing now. It is establishing these schools and teaching the children trades and useful occupations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Four-fifths of the Government schools are boarding schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Connecticut suggests that four-fifths of the Government schools are to-day boarding schools, and I presume that the remainder will be boarding schools in a very brief time if we carry out the present policy of the Government.

Now, the Senator has paid a very eloquent and I presume a very deserved tribute to the Jesuits who have done the great work that he has pictured. I know something of their history and I join with him in admiration for what they have done for civilization and for Christianity. But there are some men who are not Jesuits who have done as much as they. I presume the Senator has been to New Metlakahtla, in Alaska. He will find a Protestant missionary there who left England more than forty years ago and went into the wilderness of British North America, where the Indians were all savages and some of them cannibals, took his life in his hands and devoted himself to their interest and the principles of Christianity and civilization. Not many years ago he came over to American territory, and on an island in Alaska he has around him 1,000 Indians who have been Christianized and civilized, who have their brass bands, their schools, their churches, and their industries, and who have made internal improvements, the bonds for which are held by the Indians. Mr. Duncan (God bless him!) has never asked Congress to make an appropriation for the work he is doing there. I do not know that he would accept it if it were offered him. He is doing just the kind of work that the Senator has pictured as having been done by a certain other religious denomination in this country.

I have, Mr. President, not one particle of doubt in my mind that if we agree to-day that this question is settled, as it was agreed one year ago that it was settled, the Government will be abundantly able to take care of the education of all the Indian children. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say they can do it to-day, and that they can do it without Government aid, thus obviating the necessity of our making appropriations for sectarian purposes.

It does seem to me, as I expressed it a moment ago, that we ought not to revive this question, which has given rise, perhaps, to some feeling other than might be desirable in this Chamber; that we should agree that the Committee on Indian Affairs has reached a wise conclusion—pass the bill as it came from that committee, and let this question rest.

Mr. President, I appreciate every sentiment that fell from the lips of the Senator from Missouri. We know that he is sincere; we know that he believes precisely what he says; but after all I am satisfied that the policy of the committee is one that we can safely adopt, and that it will be better, all things considered, that it should be adopted and this vexed question settled.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I apologize for saying another word about this matter, but I do not care to have the Senator from Massachusetts put me in the attitude of advocating the taking of tax money from any citizen of the United States in order to advance the interests of any religious organization. I have attempted with my feeble use of language to make it plain that I was not prejudiced in favor of the Roman Catholic Church or desired to advance any of its doctrines; that I simply would employ the Jesuits as I would employ a mechanic to do work that I did not think could be done as well by anybody else, and that is my honest opinion.

There is something about the ceremonial of the Catholic Church that attracts the Indian. I found on that trip through Wyoming and Montana everywhere that the Indians wanted the black robes back on their reservations, for they had been driven off by the agents of the Government, by these Protestant teachers who were not teaching, but who were drawing money out of the Government for these day schools. I was at the Blackfoot Reservation, near Fort Shaw, where General Brooke, late military governor of Cuba, was then in command, and I spent two nights with him. I found there an old, broken-down Baptist preacher, from Rhode Island, who had been assaulted by the war chief of the Blackfeet but a few days before, and would have been killed but for the intervention of his daughter, because he had driven the black robes off the reservation. They had been compelled to go just outside of the line of the reservation and establish their school there. When I asked this old gentleman—he was over 74 years old—why he had done this, he said, because they had stolen his children, referring to two or three Indian children who had gone to the Jesuit school rather than to the day school, where, as I said, there were some twelve hundred enrolled and in daily attendance except on ration days, when there are only about a dozen.

One thing else and I am done. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] appeals or rather cites that extraordinary case of Metlakahtla. I went to Metlakahtla in person up in Alaska and saw the Indians whom Duncan, the Scotch lay preacher of the Church of England, had weaned away from cannibalism, and out of whom he had made Christians. I never saw a man before whom I stood in more earnest admiration than this man, who had risked his life repeatedly in order to reclaim these savages from the terrible condition in which they had been put by the sorcerers who had full command of them.

When I went to that island where those Indians had been taught to erect houses and churches and schools by this self-sacrificing young Scotchman, then an old man, the Indians were then taking off the doors from the houses and the sashes out of the windows and their scanty domestic furniture and putting them in their great canoes, made out of the immense trees that grow in that latitude, and they were sailing away to a home within the jurisdiction of the United States, this land of freedom, religious and civil. It was the most pathetic scene that I have ever witnessed in all my life, where they were taking their scanty household goods and leaving their homes in order to seek protection under the Stars and Stripes of my country.

Why was this? Because religious bigotry and fanaticism had invaded even that distant island. This man Duncan had taught those Indians every dogma of our religion except the Lord's Supper. His great work had been to win them from cannibalism, taught them by the sorcerers. It had been the practice of the different tribes to make war upon each other in order to capture human beings, that they might be roasted and devoured like the meat of oxen. Duncan was afraid to teach them this sacrament, because they would turn on him and say, "Why, you tell us it is wrong to eat each other, and yet you want us to eat our God! You want us to eat the meat and drink the blood of the Saviour whom you bring to us!" Duncan could not answer that proposition, and was afraid that with their untutored minds they would come to the conclusion that he was an impostor, and immediately return to the sorcerers and their infernal dominion.

The governor of the eastern province of British America (Vancouver) and the established church (the English Church), through its bishop, demanded that he should administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and when he told them why he could not do it the bishop said: "Then you can not remain a lay minister of the Church of England, but you must give up this charge." Duncan appealed to the church in England. He went over there and appeared before the highest ecclesiastical authorities in Great Britain, and they affirmed the judgment of the bishop of Vancouver. He came back and told these Indians, amounting to twelve hundred, what had been the result of his mission, and he said, "Now I leave it to you, either to go with me to the domain of the United States or to remain here," and all but about three hundred—for they had voted a few days before I was there—concluded to go with Duncan.

He came here one year ago, perhaps eighteen months, for I saw him here, to ask authority from the Secretary of the Interior and the President to occupy some of the vast domain which we have acquired from Russia in order to plant there the new Metlakahtla as a place of refuge from the bigotry and fanaticism and ignorance of the ecclesiastical authorities that had attempted to degrade him before his people because he would not administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in accordance with their views.

Mr. President, there could not be a more conspicuous example of how men, conscientious and good men, under the dominion of religious prejudice and fanaticism, can be induced to commit a great outrage like this.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. SHOUP. The Senator from Missouri has referred to the Indians of Metlakahtla, under the control of Professor Duncan. Let me ask the Senator if those Indians have ever received one dollar from the Government for the maintenance of their school children?

I, too, have visited Metlakahtla. I admire Professor Duncan for what he has done. He has built up a people taken almost from a state of cannibalism, and that without one dollar of appropriation from this Government. To-day they have a cannery of their own; every Indian lives in a house; he has his heating stove and his cook stove, his furniture; he has comfortable chairs, bedsteads, bedding, and everything much better than many white people. They have their own company store, their fisheries, and their sawmill.

They provide all their own sustenance and educate their own children, and they have not invited or asked the United States Government for one dollar in the way of education. They have built a church edifice there that would be a model building in any one of our inland towns throughout the United States, and every particle of work about that building, from the cutting down of the tree, the sawing of the lumber, and the putting of it into place, has been done by the Indians. They have used their cedar wood, with its variegated colors, and they have ornamented it; as I said before, they have their own sawmill, their own fishery. Mr. Duncan deserves an immense amount of credit; but he has never yet asked the United States for one dollar for the education of those Indian children.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. There were some suggestions made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that I think ought to have a reply to.

The Senator from Massachusetts expressed himself as being opposed to levying taxes for the purpose of supporting sectarian schools, and the Senator from New Hampshire spoke of the appropriations which have been heretofore made as being appropriations in aid of contract schools. The fact is that the Government of the United States pays $167 for each one of the pupils for a year in all the Government boarding schools; that is the rate at which appropriations are made to take care of those pupils; whereas those that are taken care of in the contract schools are taken care of in the very same way for $108.

Now, how it can be said to be a donation to one of these contract schools to give them $108 for doing what we pay the Government school $167 for doing passes my comprehension.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Right in that connection I should like to suggest to the Senator also that in the Government schools the buildings are heated and lighted and cared for by the Government at a cost in addition to the $167 for each pupil, while in the contract school the $108 covers the whole expense.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is true.

Mr. PETTIGREW. So that we pay about half for educating the children in the contract schools that we do in our own schools, all of which must be paid for out of the taxes taken from the people.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. For the education of the 2,000 pupils who are this year in contract schools we are paying $216,000, and that includes everything. If they were put in Government schools next year, we would pay $334,000, and in addition to that the cost of lighting, heating, and fuel, and all of those other expenses. So there will be a saving of $118,000 on this particular item—that is, the contract schools would perform for $108 the work which in our own schools costs us $167 for each pupil; and yet Senators stand up here and talk as if we were making a donation of $108 per pupil to each of these organizations.

In the appropriation bill of last year these words appear:

This is the final appropriation for sectarian schools.

The amendment I have proposed is not an appropriation. I have not proposed any appropriation. The appropriations are already made. The amendment I have proposed is simply this: It puts the matter in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. If he finds that there are not sufficient Government schools to take care of the Indians at a particular reservation, he may, if he chooses to do so, have them taken care of in the contract schools, where, instead of paying $167 for each pupil, it will cost but $108 each to do it. There is no appropriation in it; there is no violation of any agreement ever before made. It is simply a humane proposition to prevent the 2,000 children who are now in the contract schools by the action of the Government from being deprived of school facilities.

As to the increase in the capacity of the Government schools, I have had a compilation made from the reports of the Department, from which it appears that in 1895 the capacity was 16,950; in 1896 it was 17,806; in 1897 it was 18,610; in 1898 it was 19,874; in 1899 it was 20,126. This is the rate at which the capacity of these schools has increased: There was an increase of 4 per cent in the capacity of the schools from 1894 to 1895; an increase from 1895 to 1896 of 6 per cent; from 1896 to 1897 of 4 per cent; from 1897 to 1898 of 6 per cent; but from 1898 to 1899 an increase of only 1¼ per cent. This shows the reason why there is not a sufficient capacity in these schools.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

Mr. TELLER. I will read it myself, for fear the clerks may have some trouble with it. I propose the following as a substitute:

The Secretary of the Interior shall take such measures as he may consider necessary to provide educational facilities for all the Indian children now in Government and contract schools, especially those who may be discharged from contract schools.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to accept that substitute if the Senator will change it so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place the Indian children in contract schools if he deems it advisable or believes it to be best to do so.

Mr. TELLER. I think this gives him pretty general authority.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The last Indian appropriation law said that was to be the last appropriation for contract schools. I want it to appear that the Secretary of the Interior has a right, if he believes it to be necessary, to make contracts for the education of Indian children in contract schools,

Mr. TELLER. I think I would leave that matter in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I am not myself one of those who have ever been disturbed about the contract schools. The contract school system grew up because the Government did not furnish sufficient appliances in the way of buildings and teachers for the number of Indian children who were anxious to go to school, and it grew up largely after 1880, which was about the first of it. It increased during the years 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885 quite rapidly, and increased because the Government appropriations were considerably larger than the facilities furnished by the Government. The Government had not the facilities, had not the schoolhouses, to take up and use the appropriation. It was my duty at that time, having connection with the Interior Department, to provide facilities for those children. I found this system in vogue. I had never heard its usefulness questioned, nor had there been any complaint up to that time that it was an un-American system. I was exceedingly anxious, as were, I think, the public, to have all the Indian children who would go to school furnished an opportunity to do so, and a large number of them were put in schools.

It has been complained on the part of some people that the Roman Catholic Church got more than their share. If they did, Mr. President, it was simply because they were prepared to take charge of and afford facilities for the education of a greater number of children than any other branch of the Christian church; that was all. It was through no favoritism either then or subsequently, but the Catholics were better prepared with their church system than all the others put together. The result was that they got
